

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

P R E F A C E .

I purpose in these pages to give a simple line of narrative of the descendants of William Janes, following down through the different generations in the several branches, describing more or less minutely the character of persons whose names are well known to the public, having figured in their day, prominently before the world, and achieved more or less success upon the field of human endeavor, and also, shall speak of many others, less conspicuous, humble yet earnest individuals, of different generations, though I fail to do them the fullest justice.

It is but a token of love and grateful acknowledgment of the noble deeds of our progenitors to take their names from the perishing records of the present, and place them in durable form for affectionate remembrance as fragrant family memorials.

The history of the Janeses in the old world, their Norman or French extraction, and the valorous entering of Guido de Janes into England with the Norman Baron, afterward Henry II of the English throne, and his having allotted to him the manor of Kirtland as a reward of bravery and military prowess as a general, and the success of his grandson in the Crusades, for the recovery of the Holy Land from the infidels will be briefly narrated.

The line of connection between this ancient family and William Janes, the emigrant, has not been established and fortified by complete and satisfactory evidence; but numerous circumstances, pointing in this one direction, render such a fact in a high degree probable.

A feeling of pride may justly accompany the remembrance of worthy ancestors, the early founders of the nation: men perhaps, more noble than the lineage of royal lines, who scrupled not to cast out our fathers from their early homes, and compel them to venture the treacherous ocean, and the greater treachery of the savages of the forest, to work their way as best they could in a new country on an untried theatre of action.

In them, how has the old and the new world met, and what an era then and there begun in the history of nations.

To exhibit the virtues of such men we only need to record their deeds, and give a true expression of the principles that called forth those deeds to the observation of mankind.

The early conquest in which they were engaged under the French Barons, their part in the drama of the Roman Catholic and Protestant conflict, in different centuries, and their activities in the exciting scenes of Puritan reformation and the Pilgrim emigration to the New World, their early conflicts, struggles and victories, can hardly find space in this limited volume, beyond some simple allusions.

Our more immediate concern is with the descendants who lived and acted in that brief space of time, from William Janes the emigrant, down to the present blessed era of freedom.

We make up our humble tale from many disjointed fragments, and all our efforts to weave in so many fugitive rehearsals, legends and anecdotes of the personages who have appeared upon the stage, in a systematic manner, we fear will be impossible.

The gathering of these statistics is an enormous task, which fact can be better appreciated by one who has made the effort.

Pressing and constant cares in a new country and the busy scenes through which all are crowding in the passage of life, will be a fair excuse for some neglect of the records, by our fathers, not appearing to them of any immediate importance, though of great literary value to their posterity.

Between the past and the present generations how soon time draws a veil too thick to allow us to look beyond the records themselves, however imperfect.

In completing such a work, one which demands so wide a range of research over centuries, so vast a sweep in its geographical lines, so many generations, past and present, come into retrospect, we find difficulties formidable and perfection hopeless ; but not appalled at the fear of unkind criticism we venture to submit the following pages to the public, for the perusal of all who are immediately or remotely interested, while we are well aware that further research, more time and more expense would eventuate in the production of a volume of still greater interest and more satisfaction.

GENEALOGY signifies the line of descent, or list of a persons' ancestors. The Hebrews expressed it by Sepher-Toledoth, the "Book of Generations." How careful were the Jews to preserve their genealogies. The sacred writings contain their genealogies extending backward three thousand five hundred years. The genealogy of our Saviour is drawn out by the Evangelists from Adam to Joseph and Mary, through a space of over four thousand years. Matthew gives the line of descent through Joseph, his reputed or legal father, and Luke through Mary, his mother. In searching them we notice that the Messiah was restricted by divine appointment, to the posterity of Abraham to the family of David, to the existence of the second temple ; and our Lord was of the direct line of the elder branch of the royal family, in truth the very person, who, had the dominion continued in the family of David, would have legally sat on the throne. Gen., xlix, 10 ; Acts, ii, 35-36. It is a praise-worthy and pious work to search out the links that connect us with those who have passed away, the honored representatives of our name and line of being, the noble heroes of many endeavors and many struggles for grand achievements. We have noticed of late great activity and commendable zeal in this direction.

We were as happy as surprised to notice so many volumes on the shelves of our printer whose monogram appears on our title page ; to see how many of them were issued under his immediate supervision ; the Hyde, the Clark, the Hall, the Whitmore and the Macy genealogies, etc. Some of them large elegant volumes, showing the zeal and earnest effort put forth by thoughtful, reverent children of the Pilgrims. There are numerous others on the passage for the press, which may please or astonish. Our friends Dr. D. P. and Mrs. F. K. Holton of 124 West 54th street, New York city, are preparing a quadruple mammoth work on the descendants of their four grandparents, the Farwells, the Parsons, the Holtons and the Winslows combined, as per will of Miriam Holton, who, in her passing away from time, was deeply impressed with the Christian duty of devoting more attention to this interesting subject to secure the records that might irredeemably perish.

There is a zest in the perusal of so many works and in bringing before our minds so many peculiarities of different generations. But we cannot promise that our arrangement is more philosophical or more commendable than others, or that our history will excite peculiar pleasure. Some, even, may be displeased with minuteness, and some may be tried for want of minuteness in their particular case; but we venture the volume will find readers wherever the family name exists.

From worthy motives to achieve something for the good of the present age and something to benefit posterity, the writer has devoted many hours of tedious and perplexing labor, and deprived himself of many midnight hours of rest. May others as faithfully toil to reclaim the records of their fathers and put them in durable form for preservation and not fail to receive a better — a higher reward.

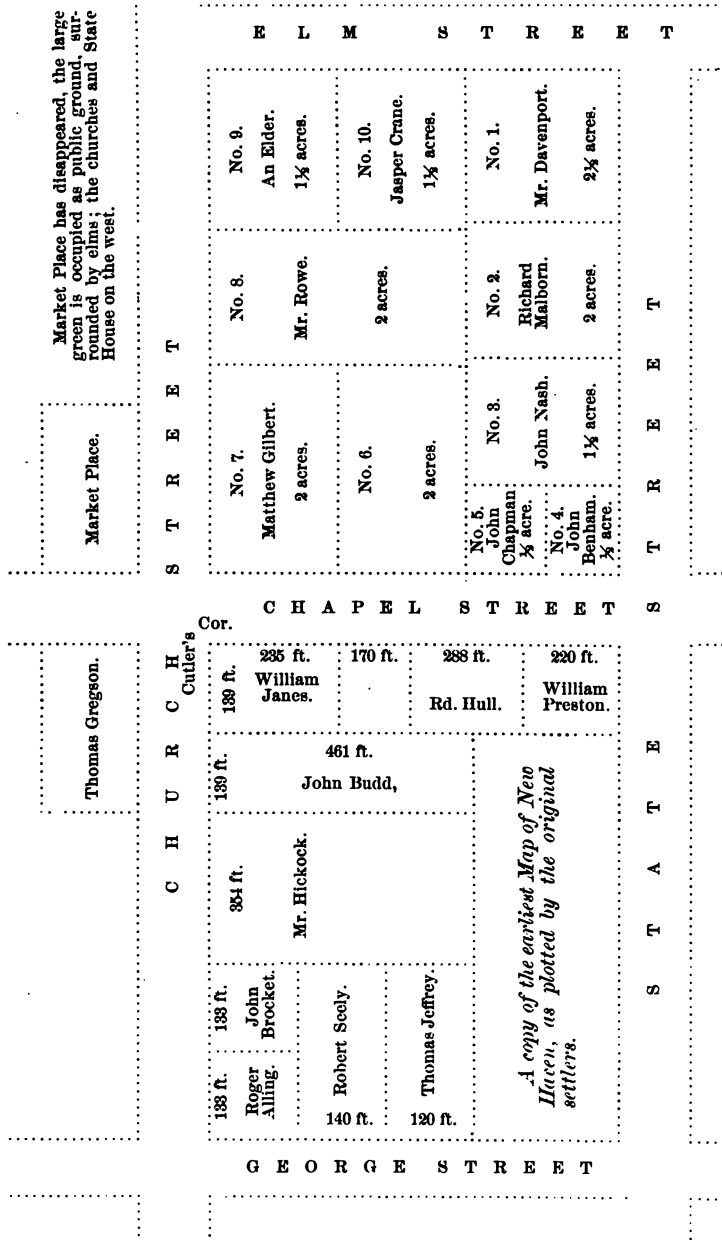

JANES FAMILY COAT OF ARMS.

The Coat of Arms which has been in the Janes family for several generations.

Arms, argent (white); a lion rampant, azure (blue), between three escallops, gules (red). Crest out of a ducal crown, or (gold), a demi lion rampant, blue, holding between the paws an escallop shell, red.

Motto — Ex Virtute Bonos.

The lion rampant, in the arms, was given from an ancestor having, whilst in command, won a battle. The escallop shells indicate the having made pilgrimages to Jerusalem. The ducal crown was given to those who held command under the sovereign duke of the ancient French confederation.

INTRODUCTION.

The compiler of these pages did not expect, when he commenced tracing the line of his ancestry, running back in some respects beyond the first immigrant of the name, to bring anything before the public.

But some years of research brought forth so much interesting matter in this relation, and the number of the families of the name being so much more numerous than was anticipated, and so many facts clothed with great interest appeared, that the subject was pursued amid many other cares to its present issue, and many of the family were anxious for the publication of the result of this long continued and very tedious research. It contains little of interest to any outside of the family represented, unless, perhaps, to some antiquarian lovers of genealogical lore.

The research, amid many discouragements, impresses deeply the conviction that much remains unrecorded which should have found page room; and much valuable information and many important facts to perfect a suitable genealogy exist in various family records and other manuscripts scattered through the country which should appear in this connection.

All this amount of matter particularly requested would have been furnished had proper attention been given to the many kind requests made to different persons to send forward a brief family record, with remarks of any interest, which would have cost but a few hours, perhaps but a few minutes, of labor.

The compiler has spared no pains to give a perfect, though not a full record, of the families here named; but as the work is assumed personally, without numerous assurances of patronage and remuneration, much interesting matter is omitted that might, under other circumstances, have been added for the gratification of those interested; but the cost forbids any large venture. Perplexity and toil are incident to such an effort beyond all calculation, and may well discourage any attempt. So much labor, so much correspondence, so many letters unanswered, unnoticed, so many folios searched in vain, so much travel, and expense of time and money would not be undertaken a second time, ordinarily if ever. But we shall be satisfied if we can satisfy others, and see those who have encouraged the work and those who have a desire to obtain it, and those who feel that a family good has thus been accomplished, exhibit the magnanimity to bear their part of the burden, and own a copy of a record which they may leave behind them as a valued legacy to their children.

Many persons of whom the author had no knowledge and who are in distant parts of the country, would no doubt have gladly aided in this endeavor; and gratitude is due to many kind friends in and out of the family for their prompt assistance, and we can but regret that some of them have already passed away from earth to higher relationships.

The copying of records by so many different parties, and the liability to mistake figures or miscopy them, must be the apology for any evident errors.

We regret that so many families have been so separated from their friends in the eastern states that they cannot now be traced with any degree of perfection; and that so many of the younger families can only be named—their record being neglected, or uncopied in season—after all the effort that has been made to collect them through verbal and written communications.

Many facts of valuable history might have been put in durable form for the entertainment or improvement of others; but the general impression prevailing, that little importance is to be attached to such a history or genealogy, sometimes even those, who should be interested in the publication, prove themselves indifferent to the task.

The author would have been glad if he could have had sufficient time and met with sufficient encouragement to spend other months in searching out a full history of all that was interesting in the old country as well as in these states. It would have been of material benefit if all who had known the true design of this work had done their part to make it a full and correct publication of what it purports to be; but much effort, much importunity has called forth too limited an amount of statistical facts. Such needless embarrassments must furnish the apology for some of these deficiencies.

The heroic examples of virtue and pious endeavor which are mirrored before us, should stimulate the present generation to greater fidelity and truer self-denial, and fill them with courage to emulate the great excellencies of our worthy ancestors, who loved civil and religious freedom, and devoted themselves to the securing of its perpetuity.

It is certainly desirable to place in a permanent and readable form the records and registries of the families who so early came to this pilgrim soil, and took such a prominent part in moulding the infant institutions under which their children were to thrive and enjoy whatever is excellent in culture and sweet in fruitage.

Mankind are much more strongly inclined to deal with the present than with the past. But we cannot ignore the past without ignoring historic manhood.

We are but the children of those who pushed through the mysterious experiences of the past; and from these marvelous experiences of other generations of men, we should be stupid not to profit. The character of our ancestors, stamped upon their children, determined the part they were to act on the great theatre of life amid providential revolutions, moral and political.

The Puritans of New England were in a large sense constructors of society. They were the founders of that mighty edifice which they and their children were to fashion and complete, and render imperishable.

The vine, dug from the storm riven bowers of persecution, planted in a genial soil, grew and spread itself over the land, and now millions enjoy its luxuriant shade which so defends them, and it will be ever cherished as a blood-bought legacy purchased by the toils and tears of a noble race who knew how to prize civil and religious freedom.

Those noble sufferers for conscience sake should not be forgotten by an ambitious and ungrateful posterity. We should honor the memory of those who, as to the earthly, gave us our being and launched us upon the tide of life for its struggles and its conquests.

It is hoped the plan of the work will be easily understood. By numbering each person in their order in Arabic or common figures, and the order of births in the family by Roman letters — both of which are given again as a caption to biographical notices of such as had issue — biographical descriptions can be readily found. This arrangement will enable one to trace his line backward. Each one is supposed to know the branch with which he is connected, and, by referring back to the preceding generation in his branch, he will follow back the line of his ancestry. Where the two numbers correspond the birth of his parent will be found; so on back to his earliest progenitor. Single figures (1), (2), indicate the different marriages of the same person. Letters also to indicate the different denominations, as (B) for Baptist, (C) for Congregationalist, (E) for Episcopal, (M) for Methodist, (P) for Presbyterian, will be found convenient when we find it important to speak of denominations.

HISTORICAL.

Most of the settlers of New Haven came with Mr. Davenport and Mr. Eaton in the ship Hector to Boston, arriving there June 3, 1637, where they tarried awhile on board of their chartered vessel. Nash, in the History of his Fathers, says, concerning this company: "On the 26th of July, 1637, from the ship Hector, and another ship not named, a company landed at Boston composed principally of merchants of London whose wealth and position prepared them to come over under better auspices than any company which had preceded them. They were mostly members of the Rev. John Davenport's church and congregation of Coleman street, London. They were provided with men skilled in various arts, and with whatever an infant colony would prospectively need.

"They were urged to settle in the vicinity of Boston; but being resolved to plant a new colony of a higher and better grade than the others that sprung from necessity, they sought a new field on the shores of these American wilds where they could evolve the new ideas then struggling for birth and growth in the bosom of their souls.

“ With lofty aims they felt impressed with the duty of finding a quiet resting place to carry out the purpose of their mission. A committee was sent forth to search a location for a settlement, and they, in due time, decided upon Quinnipiac (New Haven) then owned by a small tribe of Indians. Near the last of March the whole company sailed from Boston, and in little more than two weeks (April 16) they reached their new harbor, and commenced to prepare their new homes. In November they entered into an agreement with the chief Momaugin and his councillors for the purchase of the lands. They spent the first summer and winter in laying out their lands, in building their rude dwellings, and preparing for a permanent residence.”

On the 4th of June, 1639, they held their famous meeting in Mr. Newman's barn, and drew up their fundamental agreement for the regulation of the civil and religious affairs of the colony.

The whole number who then, or soon after, signed the covenant, was 419. They were a people of sterling integrity, and were moved by an unshaken confidence • in the promises of God.

The leading spirit of this new enterprise was Rev. John Davenport, who had, for his religious opinions and faith, left London for the continent, to be, if possible, more useful in the service of his Master.

Finding no door of usefulness now open before him in Holland—in this land where so many of the Puritans, for a short time, had found refuge—Mr.

Davenport soon after returned to his native country—England—for the purpose of emigrating to America.

For some years he had been familiar, chiefly through his personal friend Rev. John Cotton, with the weighty affairs that were going on in New England. He had taken an early interest in the formation of the Massachusetts colony, and contributed £50 towards the procurement of its charter. He was present at the meeting of the company in London, March 23, 1629, and also at those of March 30, April 8, August 28–29, and those of November and December following.

He now resolved with his friend Theophilus Eaton, to collect a band of colonists whom, under God, they might lead out of spiritual Egypt—the house of bondage and oppression—into the distant land of promise. Many of those who had formerly enjoyed the ministry of Mr. Davenport in Coleman street, were ready to join them.

He who divided the Red sea before the Israelites gave this little company as safe a passage across the ocean. They arrived in Boston in the Hector, and another ship, on the 3d of June, 1637. Among other passengers who came with this expedition was Edward Hopkins, son-in-law of Governor Eaton, and himself for many years governor of Connecticut colony. By his will he became a distinguished benefactor of Harvard College and several other institutions of learning in New England. With these came also Lord Leigh, son and heir of the Earl of Marlborough, a youth of nineteen, humble and pious, who came merely to see the country, and returned to England a few weeks after in company with Sir Henry Vane. Mr. Davenport was heartily welcomed by Mr. Cotton and his associates, and more particularly as his assistance was now required in helping to stay the prevalence of antinomian error, which seemed at the time, through the fanaticism of Ann Hutchinson and others, to have threatened the peace and purity of the churches.

His preaching, and also his counsels in the synod of that year, evidently had a favorable influence in the suppression of those dangerous errors. At the request of the synod he closed the proceedings by a sermon on the text, Phil. iii, 16. In this discourse he declared the result of the assembly, and "with much wisdom and sound argument urged to unity and harmony." These difficulties being in a good degree removed, it became an object with Mr. Davenport and his company to fix upon a place of settlement.

The wealth, intellectual endowments and moral worth of this newly arrived company of emigrants, made it very desirable with the already organized colonies of Plymouth and Massachusetts to retain them among them, and to this end very liberal offers were made.

"The refusal to accept which," says Mr. M'Clure, "was regarded as almost an unkindness by those who coveted this accession to their strength." It was thought that Mr. Davenport's residence in Massachusetts, might draw down upon that colony the speedier wrath of Laud, who loved them not before. When he heard Mr. Davenport had fled to New England, to avoid the storm of prelatical indignation, the persecuting archbishop had boldly said, My arm shall reach him there. It was supposed that the scattering of those who were obnoxious to Laud into different places might lessen the motives for stretching out his potent arm against them. Although he obtained a commission from the king to carry out these designs, yet the political excitements by which they were surrounded at home, obliged him and his monarch, Charles I, to confine their activity to resisting a revolution which eventually resulted in the overthrow of their own power. As John Cotton expressed it, "God rocked three nations with dispensations to procure some rest for those shaking infant churches."

Another probable reason why Mr. Davenport and Mr. Eaton wished to form an independent colony beyond the limits of any existing grant or patent, was, that they might carry out their peculiar views in regard to a civil state. They seemed to have desired the formation of a community in some respect different from any that existed elsewhere, one more thoroughly scriptural, more in accordance with the ancient Jewish system, one fashioned throughout in the strictest conformity to the rules of the Bible.

In the fall of 1637, Mr. Eaton and others of the company made a journey to Connecticut to explore the lands and harbors on the coast. They came to a place lying at the head of a harbor which sets up about four miles from Long Island sound. Its Indian name was Quinnipiac. The explorers were much taken with the beauty and fertility of this tract of country, and most of them being Londoners and accustomed to commercial pursuits they deemed it a desirable site for the establishment of a commercial town. This place was therefore fixed upon for the location of their colony. On what is now the south side of Church and Meadow streets they erected a hut, in which a few men remained for the winter to make preparations for the commencement of the settlement, while the rest returned to Massachusetts.

Early in the spring the colonists prepared to remove to their new homes in the wilderness.

After taking an affectionate leave of their friends, and gratefully acknowledging the many kindnesses they had there received, the company sailed from Boston for the place of their destination on the 13th of March, 1638.

This band of pilgrims reached Quinnipiac, the future New Haven, on the 14th of April, 1638. Mr. Davenport was then forty-one years of age.

The next day is the Sabbath. A drum beats in the rude and hasty encampment. The armed men, with their wives and children, gather at this signal under a branching oak. They meet to consecrate to God a new region reclaimed from heathen darkness. For the first time the aisles of that forest temple resounded with the praises of the Most High. Here are men nurtured in the halls of Oxford and Cambridge, and women used to all the elegant refinements of the British metropolis. They are gathered under the oaken tree. Why are they here? Why this change in their condition? Why are they here, far from the haunts of civilization, confronting privations and suffering in every form? It is for conscience, to keep that sacred thing unspotted — it is for posterity — for eternity — for God.

What sought they thus afar,
Bright jewels of the mine?
The wealth of seas? the spoils of war?
They sought a faith's pure shrine.

Ay, call it holy ground,
The soil where first they trod;
They have left unstained what there they found —
Freedom to worship God.

Surely angels rejoiced while infinite love smiled upon the scene. Mr. Davenport preached from the text, Matthew iv, 1. At the close of these services Mr. Davenport remarked that he had enjoyed a good day. Soon after their arrival at Quinnipiac, at the close of a "day of fasting and prayer," these exiles formed and subscribed what they denominated a plantation covenant. By this instrument they engaged "that as in matters that concern the gathering and ordering of a church, so also in all public offices which concern civil order, as choice of magistrates and officers, making and repealing laws, dividing allotments of inheritance, and all things of like nature, they would all of them be ordered by the rules which the Scripture held forth to them." This may be considered the original civil constitution of the New Haven colony.

It may here be stated that the planters of this colony did not disregard the rights of the Indians. The most ancient record in existence at New Haven is, as it ought to be, the record of two treaties with the aboriginal proprietors by which the soil was purchased, and the relations thenceforward to subsist between the Indians and the English were distinctly defined. These treaties commenced thus, "Articles of agreement between Theophilus Eaton and John Davenport and other English planters at Quinnipiac, on the one party, and Momaugin, the Indian Sachem of Quinopiocke and Sugcogism, Wesaucucke, and others of his council, on the other party, made and concluded the 24th day of November, 1638, Thomas Stanton being interpreter."

These treaties were held in good faith by both parties, and the colony lived in much peace and security from the hostile attacks of the surrounding tribes. By these treaties the Indians considered themselves under the protection of the English, while they retained the right to hunt in their forests, to fish in the streams, with the pledge not to disturb the corn fields or pastures of the English, or to interrupt their trade.

More than a year after their arrival was spent in erecting their dwellings, and in clearing their lands. During this period Mr. Davenport prepared his Discourse about Civil Government in a New Plantation, whose Design is Religion.

This treatise was published many years after in 1673. It was a vindication of the practice long maintained by our fathers of allowing the rights of voting and holding office to only such as were members of the church.

Having given themselves time for mature deliberation and wise counsel, and practically recognizing the principle that "Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed," "all free planters"—by which was meant all who were engaged in planting the colony—on the 4th of June, 1639, convened in a large barn of Mr. Newman, and in a formal manner proceeded to the organization of a civil government. "No reference, direct or indirect," says Professor Kingsley, "was made by those concerned in this transaction to their native country, as at the time the colonists signed their plantation covenant, so now they seem to have supposed that since they were in fact beyond the actual control of any existing sovereignty, they had a perfect right to constitute a government for themselves."

The business of the occasion, in conformity to the views of those assembled and the propriety of the case, was opened with prayer, and Mr. Davenport is said to have preached a sermon from Prov. ix, 1.

Mr. Davenport then proposed several queries to the planters, and urged them "to consider seriously in the presence and fear of God, the weight of the business they met about, and not to be rash or slight in giving their votes to things they understood not, but to digest fully and thoroughly what should be propounded to them, and without respect to men, as they should be satisfied and persuaded in their own minds, to give their answers in such sort as they should be willing should stand upon record for posterity." They then unanimously resolved "that the Scriptures do hold forth a perfect rule for the direction and government of all men in all duties, which they are to perform to God and men as well in families and commonwealth as in matters of the church."

After this they renewed their assent to their plantation covenant, and mutually bound themselves, not only in their ecclesiastical proceedings, but also in the choice of magistrates, the making and repealing of laws, the dividing of inheritances, and in all civil matters to submit themselves to the rules held forth in the Word of God.

Then, as the record informs us, Mr. Davenport declared to them by the Scriptures what kind of persons might best be trusted with matters of government, and, by sundry arguments from Scripture, proved that they were such men as were described in Exod. xviii, 21, Deut. i, 13, with Deut. xvii, 15, and 1 Cor. iv, 1, 6, 7.

After some further consideration, the company, among other fundamental regulations, adopted this: "That church members only should be free burgesses, and that they only should choose magistrates and officers among themselves, to have the power of transacting all public civil affairs of the plantation, of making and repealing laws, dividing inheritances, deciding differences that may arise, and doing all things and business of like nature."

Having founded their civil commonwealth they proceeded to the organization of their church.

On the twenty-second of August, 1639, seven persons, chosen out of their number, among whom Mr. Davenport was one, entered into a covenant with one another, and with Christ, and thus was constituted the first church of New Haven. Being thus organized, they proceeded to admit others of the company to their fellowship.

Shortly after the church was instituted Mr. Davenport was chosen pastor. He was ordained by the hands of two or three of the lay brethren through Mr. Hooker and Mr. Stone. The reverend pastors of the church in Hartford were present, and one of them made the prayer. This ceremony was not used, because the validity of his ordination in the Church of England was doubted, it being in fact but an installation or solemn recognition of his new relation to a particular church.

His pastoral relations were satisfactory, and his labors greatly blessed by winning many of the "heirs of the grace of life."

Soon after the organization of the church, the general court, called the "seven pillars," proceeded to constitute the body of freemen and elect their officers. Mr. Davenport expounded several passages of Scripture, describing the character of civil magistrates as given in the sacred oracles. Theophilus Eaton, the excellent statesman and counseling friend of Mr. Davenport, was chosen their governor, and everything was as harmonious, successful and prosperous as it could be possibly expected. So much we record to show the excellency of purpose, and the stability of the men who composed this new colony with which William Janes had associated himself in matters, temporal and spiritual, of the highest moment, and in which he was so prominent an actor.

THE JANES FAMILY.

The family of Janes is of Norman or French origin. Guido de Janes, as a general of the French Confederation, accompanied Henry II lawful heir to the English throne, when he went over to assume the sovereignty (1154), instead of his mother Matilda, empress of Germany, daughter of Henry I, and appointed by him to be his successor.

This Norman baron, heir to the throne, having established himself firmly as the English sovereign, the first of the Plantagenets, conferred upon Guido de Janes the manor of Kirtland or Kirtling in the county of Cambridgeshire, for his valor as a general in his service, and as an acknowledgment of military prowess. We cannot yet obtain the particulars of his family, but his grandson Geoffry de Janes (about 1200 or 1204) took up arms with Baldwin, count of Flanders, in his successful effort to obtain Jerusalem, and was one who contributed to make Baldwin king of Jerusalem. Geoffry, after his return to England, made with his son Guy or Guido three pilgrimages to the Holy Land. Hence the escallop shells in the coat of arms which commemorate those events.

Before his death, he acquired through his wife Eleanor, the heiress of Sir Richard Penruddock, the lands of Botalock in Cornwall, upon which he erected a chantry for four Cistercian monks, which he dedicated to "St. Mary of Grief." These chantries, or chanting singing places, were in connection with the cathedrals and chapels of worship, and were popular in those superstitious days, and gave a great name to the wealthy, benevolent souls, who contributed their wealth to build them, and the soul of the patron was especially supposed to be prayed out of purgatory. The Roman Catholic religion, it is hardly needful to say, was the religion of that dark period.

For a few centuries chantries were quite flourishing. Great numbers connected themselves with them, but in the 37th year of Henry VIII's reign these endowments were confiscated to the crown, and any failing to come into his possession were taken by his successor Edward VI.

The family name, Janes, is still in Kirtling, and, by a rare fortune, these estates mentioned are still in the family name.

From this family came William Janes or Jeanes in 1637 with the John Davenport colony which remained eight months in Massachusetts, in or near Boston, before they set sail for New Haven, their chosen abode, for a settlement.

The generations between Geoffry de Janes and William the emigrant are not yet transmitted to the compiler. We know little of their history. Henry Janes, born 1611, graduated at Oxon hall, and was greatly esteemed for his many good qualities of mind and heart, as an ornament to the church for which he ministered till called to his account. We suppose him an elder brother of William our ancestor.

The name in French we find de Jeanne. It was Anglicized by dropping the de and afterward one of the n's, adding an s for euphony, or to show of what family. The first e was retained and used in many early records. On the Springfield, Massachusetts, records we have Abell Jeanes. William Jeanes so signed his on the plantation covenant. I think he dropped the first e afterward, and his family followed the same orthography. Our ancestors paid less attention to the spelling of their names than those at the present day. We find Jane, Jene, Jeans, Jayne, Joan, Jeanes, and Janes—all may have come from the same French Jeanne.

In these published pages some links are still wanting to make the connections certain between some of the families, as will be seen by the reader; but a degree of perfection is reached by full copies of many different records in various parts of the country.

From their great multiplication they must be considered a prolific race, obedient to the command "Multiply and replenish the earth." They claim no distinction for heroic deeds or ancestral renown, or what the world may mark as the glory of the human race.

They have no higher or surer schemes for the acquisition of wealth than others. But if fidelity, honest and stable, unquestionable piety be worthy of note, then, in the history of their fathers, there is cause for devout reverence. Like the majority of the Puritans¹ who fled from Europe—from England—for the sake of their faith, for freedom in way and spirit of worship, their ancestors were particularly a religious people. They were distinguished for their lofty aims and for their spirit of self-denial. Their descendants have mainly followed in the way these ancient worthies trod. They have pushed on diligently in a career of usefulness and prosperity in a measure worthy of their sires. They may truthfully be called a respectable, industrious and prosperous race. Without very many preeminent distinctions they have filled many posts of honor and trust. They have stood high at the bar, and have been honored on the bench, in the halls of congress, in the pulpit, at the marts of commerce and in the department of agriculture.

¹Soon after the commencement of the reformation in England (1534), the Protestants were divided into two parties, one the followers of Luther, and the other of Calvin. The former had chosen gradually and almost imperceptibly, to recede from the church of Rome; while the latter, more zealous, and convinced of the importance of a thorough reformation, and at the same time possessing much firmness, and high notions of religious liberty, were for effecting a thorough change at once. Their consequent endeavors to expunge from the church all the inventions which had been brought into it since the days of the apostles, and to introduce the "Scripture purity," derived for them the name of Puritans.

FIRST GENERATION.

WILLIAM JANES.

In relation to our progenitor, William Janes, who emigrated to this country in 1637, we have left us only the briefest items of history. The veneration and respect his name inspires in our hearts, creates in us a wish to learn, if possible, some other things concerning his history which at this period could not well be found, though there are some interesting traditions. He was a man of sterling character and great moral force, rendering himself essentially useful in his profession. He was among the early settlers of the country, with John Davenport and his coadjutors.

He was born in Essex, England, during the reign of James I, about the year 1610, when the Puritans were suffering a fearful persecution from powerful and bitter foes.

In the year 1637 when he came to this country with other companions of persecution and adventure, anxious admirers and ardent lovers of liberty, Charles I was the reigning monarch, and Bishop Laud, the religious tyrant, was in his glory as high commissioner of religion and of conscience. The times were indeed stormy and fruitful in the development of strong faith among Christians. These crises stirred the masses with a mighty purpose to achieve their freedom and that of their posterity.

This was the class of men who planted the New Haven colony, among whom William Janes acted a prominent part. For about seventeen years he was a conspicuous citizen and beloved teacher, moulding and training the minds of the young and in educating the rising generation of the colonists to the utmost extent their facilities would allow, and in imparting the best intellectual culture and the highest moral tone to all the youth of the infant colony. He was a teacher of the rudiments of education, and a teacher of the doctrines of the Bible. Vigorous, systematic, resolute and true to every instinct of manhood, he was beloved and respected by all who knew him.

The records show that this new colony paid him the small sum of £10 per annum, and the more prosperous and wealthy parents made a further compensation personally.

In the year 1652 the people of Wethersfield, a colony near Hartford, invited him to remove among them as their teacher, which he finally engaged to do, but only "by consent of the brethren."

But he returned to New Haven during the same year and resumed his former position, leading the younger members of the colony in their social, political and religious aspirations, and as a teaching elder the minds of others to clearer views of the doctrine of redemption.

His homestead he built on his allotment of land which he received October, 1639, on the corner of Chapel and Church streets, known as Cutler corner, and now covered by a costly pile of brick buildings. This lot, at the corner of the now beautiful green, measured 139 feet on Church street and 235 on Chapel street.¹

An early valuation of the property of the colony made his considerably above the average, but not large. In the New Haven colony records William Janes is named: 1. as signing the plantation covenant, which shows his autograph. 2. In 1643 he makes returns of 5 persons in his family and an estate of £150. 3. In 1648 he is a member of the general court. 4. In the latter end of the year, viz: March, 1648-9 he "passeth over to John Meggs, his house and lot lying at the corner over against Mr. Gregsons betwixt the house of John Budd and the highway." (See Map, 8th page).

About the year 1656, with other pioneers of liberty, he went higher up the Connecticut valley to the west of Holyoke, about eighteen miles above Springfield, to a place they called Northampton. Here, in the wilderness, others began to lay the foundations of good government. Here they planted a high toned, moral and religious colony. Here they enjoyed the blessings of civil and religious freedom. The votes on the town record of Northampton will show his status there :

“Voted 25th of June, 1657, that William Janes become an inhabitant. 10th January, 1658, town voted that William Janes be recorder of lands and so for ensuing years. Voted 19th February, 1660, to agree with William Janes, to transcribe the old records. Voted 17th June, 1660, that he have a house lot of two acres.” [Voted 11th January, 1662, town grant to Elisha Janes, four acres land, on condition he build a house thereon within a year. One month from that time Elisha died suddenly at Springfield.]

Here William Janes practiced his teaching art. The town early voted him £10 town stock per year for teaching, and besides four-pence per week for teaching the primer, and six-pence per week for teaching to cast “accompts.” If any did not come every day, in their case the charge should be made so as to reckon three school days one week. He was the recorder of lands for many years, and the Northampton records show hundreds of pages of his bold autograph. Here he was a teaching elder, and, in the absence of the minister, conducted the religious services of the Sabbath. Here he built his new house on the spot, some years later occupied by the grandfather of Gov. Caleb Strong, who died a century and a quarter afterward.

The Connecticut River rail road company purchased of the Strong family, and now occupy the spot for their grounds and depot, over which thousands pass and repass, which in his early day would indeed have seemed marvelous.

Here, in the house built by him, he parted from the wife of his youth, the mother of his early children, who died like a Christian heroine, committing her mourning family to God, and leaving behind her a record of purity and maternal devotedness worthy of her position and her profession.

These early Christians established an influence in behalf of morality and practical religion to be coveted by later generations. Prayer and self-abnegation and self-sacrifice were the characteristics of these pioneers which gave society a mould that was permanent in its sweet perfume of spiritual blessings.

Notwithstanding the many Christian virtues, the spirit of self-denial and the high toned piety of the New England fathers, they had their imperfections. Their many trials and crosses must have soured their temper in relation to the conduct of prodigal youth and other companions of their heroic struggles.¹ Want ¹LAW REGULATING DRESS.—Sumptuary laws restraining excess of apparel in some classes were common in England and other nations for centuries. Massachusetts enacted such a law in 1651, ordering that persons whose estates did not exceed £200, and those dependent on them should not wear gold or silver buttons, gold or silver lace, bone lace above 2s. per yard, or silk hoods or scarfs upon penalty of 10s. for each offense. Any person wearing such articles might be assessed in country rates as if they had estates of £200.

The first attempt to have this law observed in Hampshire, was made in 1673. At the March court, twenty-five wives and five maids of prudence and foresight vexed their souls when laboring so industriously to maintain a livelihood, since fire and sword, the tomahawk and death was constantly imaged before them.

The Connecticut valley was the theatre of vast tragical events; but providence designed their settlement and occupancy for a superior race.

The lands bordering on Connecticut river, which are now in the towns of Northampton, Hadley and Hatfield, were first known by the Indian name Nonotuck. It was as early as the 6th of May, 1653, that a number of persons petitioned the general court of Massachusetts to grant them liberty to plant, possess, and inhabit the place on Conetiquot river above Springfield, called Nonotuck, as their own inheritance, representing that the same was a place suitable to erect a belonging to Springfield, Northampton, Hadley, Hatfield and Westfield, were presented by the jury as persons of small estate, who "use to wear silk contrary to law." Six of these belonged to Hadley, viz:

Wife of John Westcarr was acquitted.

" Joseph Barnard was fined 10s. and cost, 2s. 6d.

" Thomas Wells, Jr., was admonished.

" Edward Grannis was admonished.

" Joseph Kellogg was acquitted.

Maid Mary Broughton was admonished.

Of the thirty, only three were fined, and the fines were remitted at the next court.

At the March court, 1674, the wife of Edward Grannis was again presented for wearing silk. Her silk hood and scarf were brought into court, and "though somewhat worn, they had been good silk." She was fined 10s.

At the March court, 1676, the jury presented sixty-eight persons from five towns, viz: thirty-eight wives and maids, and thirty young men, "some for wearing silk and that in a flaunting manner, and town for the furtherance of the public weal, and the propagating the gospel, and which promised, in an ordinary way of God's providence, a comfortable subsistence, whereby they might live and attend upon God in his holy ordinances without distraction.

There is a tradition, that one English family came to this place in 1652, and lived here during the next winter, on land which lies east of what is called Hawley street. However this may be, in the year 1653, a number of the petitioners took possession of the township, in consequence of the liberty given them by the government.

Selectmen, or townsmen, as they were then generally called, were chosen in the year 1655. It is presumed from this, as well as from other circumstances, that the town was incorporated in the year others for long hair and other extravagances." Two were fined 10s., and many of the others were ordered to pay the clerk's fees, 2s. 6d. each. There were ten from Hadley, viz: Joseph Barnard and his wife Sarah, and his sister Sarah, William Rooker, Thomas Crofts, Jonathan Wells, Joseph Grannis, Nehemiah Dickinson, wife of Mark Warner; and the wife of Thomas Wells, Jr., who was fined 10s. Nine were admonished and ordered to pay the clerk's fees. Several of the sixty-eight presented were wives, daughters or sons of men of good estate. Two unmarried daughters of Elder John Strong of Northampton were of this number.

In March, 1678, eight females of Northampton, Springfield, etc., were complained of for wearing silk contrary to law in this day of calamity and trouble. Two were fined 10s., some paid clerk's fees, and some were referred to another court. The boldest of these females was Hannah Lyman, sixteen years of age, daughter of Richard Lyman of Northampton, deceased. She was presented September, 1676, "for wearing silk in a flaunting manner in an offensive way and garb, not only before, but when she stood presented, not only in ordinary but in extraordinary times." She was fined 10s. January, 1677.

1654. But it is said the act of incorporation cannot now be found.¹

The Indian title to the land had been purchased in 1653, from a number of Indians, who claimed to be the owners of it; and a deed was given by them accordingly, to the use of the settlers. But on the 28th of September, 1658, the sachem, Umpanchela, complained to the commissioners, assembled to hold a court at Northampton, that he had not received so much for his part of the land as he expected. It was thereupon agreed by the inhabitants to satisfy his demand; and the sachem executed a new deed, in the presence of the court, releasing to the inhabitants of Northampton, all his right and title to the township.

For the space of twenty-two years after Northampton was settled, the first settlers lived in peace with the Indians.

There was frequent intercourse between them and their English neighbors, the Indians often coming into the village for traffic and other purposes, and the salutation of Netop (my friend) was often heard in the street.

Indian men and women, young men, maidens and small children in their scanty dresses, were every day sights, and excited no especial curiosity. The men sold furs and venison, and the women made and sold baskets and other things.

¹It was probably burnt, with the records, in the great fire in Boston in 1711, or afterwards, when the court house was burnt.

Among these laborious Indian women were some that were mild and kind hearted. The western Nipmucks continued to be pagans.

As to the others, though complaints were sometimes made of their petty thefts, and of abuses committed when they were in a state of intoxication, yet they remained here in peace and friendship with the English, until the war commenced in 1675, called Philip's war, in the course of which they left this part of the country, and none of them have ever since had a settled residence here.

At the beginning of Philip's war, the Indians about Springfield, Northampton and Hadley seemed inclined to join the English, or at least to remain neutral; but they were soon induced by the emissaries of Philip to unite with him and the other hostile Indians. The combination was so general and extensive, as to endanger the existence, not only of the settlements on Connecticut river, but of the whole colony. The Indians frequently assaulted the towns on the river, and in some instances did great mischief to the inhabitants, killing their cattle and destroying their property, when they were unable to take their lives.

On the 25th of August, 1675, the Indians killed Samuel Mason, in this town, and on the 28th of September in the same year, they killed Praisever Turner and two other persons. About the middle of October following, seven or eight men, venturing to bring in some of their harvest from Pynchon's meadow, were suddenly attacked by the Indians, and the greater part, being destitute of arms, as the enemy had observed where they were deposited and seized them, they were glad to flee with their horses, which they took from their carts. One of them, however, got possession of his gun, and killed one of the Indians, and then escaped with the rest. At the same time the Indians burnt four or five houses, and two or three barns, that stood at some distance from the principal settlement. On the 29th of the same month, the Indians killed Thomas Salmon, Joseph Baker, and Joseph Baker Jr., as they were at work in the meadow, and attempted to burn the mill, but it was so well defended that they were unable to effect their purpose.

To guard against a surprise, the inhabitants made a kind of barricado about the town, by setting up pallisados, or cleft wood about eight feet long, to check the force of any sudden assault. This must have been a weak defense against a warlike enemy, but it proved to be of great use against the Indians; for though on the 14th of March, 1676, a large number of them broke through the pallisados at the lower end of the street, now called Pleasant street, in three places, yet as a company of soldiers had arrived in town the evening before, the Indians met with a warm reception, and as soon as they began to be repulsed, they fled with precipitation through the breaches, and never afterwards, during that war, adventured to break into this or the neighboring towns, that were so secured. In this attack, they killed Robert Bartlet, and Thomas Holton, and two other men and two women, and set fire to four or five dwelling houses, and as many barns. Many of the Indians, it was supposed, were killed.

In the attack, made upon the Indians at Deerfield, near Miller's Falls, on the 19th of May, 1676, by upwards of one hundred and fifty men, who had been collected from Northampton, Hadley and Hatfield, and which has been called the Fall fight, several of the inhabitants of this town lost their lives, with Capt. William Turner, who commanded them. Of those who marched from Northampton, fifteen were killed.

The pallisados, before mentioned, were kept up several years; but having gone to decay, the people in March, 1690, considering themselves in danger of being assaulted by the enemy, encompassed a great part of the town with pickets, near the place where the former stood in Philip's war. This kind of defense was maintained for a number of succeeding years.

On the 13th of May, 1704, old style,¹ the Indians

¹ OLD STYLE. — The number of days in a year was determined in ancient times, by the styles, which cast a shadow on a plain surface. The shortest was on the day of the summer solstice, and its return in 365 days completed the civil year. Julius Cæsar made a reform in the calendar, forty-six years before Christ. His solar year consisted of 365 days and six hours, and the six hours were taken into account by making every fourth year of 366 days. This manner of computing time is old style. There was an error in it, the true solar year being eleven minutes and some seconds short of 365½ days, and this difference made a whole day in about 129 years, and before the year 1582, the vernal equinox occurred on the 11th of March, thirteen or fourteen days sooner than in the time of Cæsar. Pope Gregory XIII introduced the new style in 1582, by taking out ten days from the month of October, which corrected the calendar back to the council of Nice 325 years after Christ. To countervail in future the excess of eleven minutes and twelve or fifteen seconds in a year it was determined to attacked the village of Pascomac. They had been to Merrimac river; but meeting with no success they then directed their course toward Westfield; but Westfield river was so high they could not pass it. At this time they were in almost a famishing state: but being near to Paskhomuck, of which they had learned something the year before, and hoping to obtain provision to satisfy their hunger, they changed their route for that place, intending, as they afterwards declared, to resign themselves up, if they could obtain no food otherwise. In the evening before the 13th of May, the Indians went upon Mount Tom, and observed the situation of the place. As the meadow was then covered with water, they supposed the village might be taken, and that no aid could come seasonably from the town, on account of the intervening flood.¹ A little before day light, the Indians attacked the village. The house of Benoni Jones was encom-omit three days in four centuries, by making common years of three leap years, viz: 1700, 1800 and 1900. Some English philosophers and others objected to this imperfect reform of the calendar, this going back to the council of Nice instead of the Christian era, and there were other objections, and England continued to follow the old style until 1700, and eleven days after that year. By an act of parliament, eleven days were taken from the old calendar in 1752, the 3d of September being reckoned the 14th, and England and her colonies conformed to the new style.

¹The season at that time was remarkably backward; for though so late in the year, being the 24th of May, according to the present style, the trees and bushes had not budded; and the year was so far advanced before the flood subsided from the meadow, that many persons doubted whether it was expedient to plant their corn; but notwithstanding, as there was no frost till late in the season, the crop of corn proved to be uncommonly good.

passed with pickets. The Indians procured flax and other combustibles, and set them on fire, which was communicated to the house. A young woman, named Patience Webb, was awaked, and, looking out of a window, was shot through the head. The people surrendered, and all the families I have mentioned were killed or taken prisoners. Some of the prisoners were afterwards rescued by people from the town: but one of the number, Benjamin Janes, having fallen a little in the rear, effected his escape by running to the water, through a hollow, encompassed with bushes, near the residence of Mrs. Phineas Clark, and springing into a skiff he knew to be lying there, he headed it for Northampton, and, with the blessing of heaven succeeding his efforts, was soon there; and hence was preserved, and was also the first to inform the people of the attack of the Indians upon Paskhomuck village and of the horrors his eyes had witnessed. The people of the town were at once upon the alert to intercept, if possible, the enemy, and to recapture the captives: and those of them who were under the command of Capt. Taylor went round by Pomeroy's meadow, and met the Indians between Mount Tom and Westfield road, on the farm, now in possession of Messrs. Waites, when a skirmish ensued, in which the captain was killed.¹ Of the five families belonging to the village, the Indians killed the following persons: Samuel Janes,¹ his wife and three children; Benoni Jones and two children, and the young woman before named; John Searle and three children; Moses Hutchinson and one child; and four children of Benjamin Janes — the whole number nineteen. The wife of this Benjamin Janes was taken to the top of Pomeroy's mountain, and was there knocked in the head and scalped. The people from Northampton found her in this situation, and perceiving that she was still alive, carried her with them, on their return, to the town; and she recovered and lived until she was more than eighty years old. The wife of Moses Hutchinson was taken prisoner, but soon made her escape. John Searle's wife was also taken and severely wounded, but was afterwards rescued from the Indians. Benoni Jones's wife, and Elisha, the son of John Searle, were taken prisoners to Canada: of the former of these I have learned no particulars beyond what I have given; but, of the latter it is a pleasure to state, that, after living some years in Canada, he returned to his few surviving friends, passed among them the residue of his days, and at length died "in a good old age."²

¹Samuel Janes lived where the house of Mr. Obadiah Janes now stands; John Searls, where his son Elisha and his grandson of the same name afterwards dwelt; Benjamin Janes, where Captain Philip Clark lives; and Moses Hutchinson, near the place where Mr. Solomon Ferry's house stands.

²Elisha Searle was a small lad when captured. He was conducted a prisoner to Canada, where his mind was thoroughly imbued with the superstitions of the Romish religion. When he became a young man, he, with a company of Indians, made arrangements to enter on Another party of Indians on the road leading to Westfield, killed one, and took two prisoners; but others of our men, coming up, retook the prisoners and killed two of the Indians.

July 9th, 1708, Samuel Parsons and Joseph Parsons were killed in Northampton by the Indians.

On the 10th of August, 1711, Samuel Strong, Jun., was killed, and his father taken prisoner.

August 26th, 1724, Nathaniel Edwards, 2d, was killed by the Indians, in the road near Bartlet's mill, and another person was wounded.

In the year 1745, the town, considering themselves in danger of an invasion from the French and Indians, agreed to take measures to fortify themselves. For this purpose the town was divided into fourteen sections, in each of which one house was fortified and guarded with flankers, to be a place of refuge for the women and children: they also erected mounts or a hunting and trapping expedition, along the great Western lakes, for the purpose of obtaining fur. As no priest was to accompany them, he went to his priest, and with much concern inquired what he should do, as there would be no priest to whom he could confess, and he might die on the journey? The priest told him that it would be just as well to confess to a tree as to a priest; and then sent him away. This declaration struck Elisha very forcibly, and he did not forget it. He revolved the idea in his mind until he became convinced that the whole system of Romanism was a deception.

After his return, he refused to confess his sins to a priest, and soon visited the place of his nativity. He related this account to his pious friends and relations, and became an enlightened and exemplary professor of the Protestant religion. He never returned to Canada, but married, reared up a family, was a worthy citizen, and maintained a reputable standing in the church of God. Some of his descendants still remain in this region.

watch houses in divers places, particularly in the extreme parts of the town. Before the end of that war, on the 27th of August, 1747, Elisha Clark was killed by the Indians, when he was threshing in his barn, in that part of the town, which is now Southampton. At another time, in the course of the same war, Noah Pixley was killed in the road, in the same quarter of the town.

In the war, which commenced in 1755, no injury was done by the French or Indians in Northampton. The people, however, thought themselves in danger, and for some time, at the commencement of the war, a watch was maintained in the night time, in divers parts of the town. A number of soldiers were also stationed at Southampton for the defense of the inhabitants of that district.

We have heard of other instances of mischief done in this place by the Indians, but have not learned the particulars. From the first settlement of the town it was an exposed frontier, until after the conquest of Canada in the year 1759. Settlements had been gradually extended northward upon Connecticut river, but fear of the French and Indians prevented improvements at any considerable distance west from the river. The country to the west and northwest, between this place and Canada, was a wilderness for more than a hundred years after the town was settled.

Among the earliest transactions of the people of this place, we find that measures were taken for the settlement of the gospel ministry among them. On the 7th of June, 1658, it was agreed in town meeting, by unanimous consent, to desire Mr. Eleazer Mather to be a minister to them in a way of trial in dispensing his gifts. In December of that year, the town voted that a rate of one hundred pounds should be levied for building a house for the ministry; and on the 4th of January then next following, they agreed to lay out eighty acres of meadow for the ministry.

The Rev. Eleazer Mather was the first settled minister in the town. He was a son of the Rev. Richard Mather of Dorchester, and was born at that place May 13th, 1637. When a church was gathered at Northampton, he was ordained the pastor of it on the 18th of June, 1661, and was greatly esteemed as a man of talents and piety. Soon after the ordination of Mr. Mather, Mr. John Strong was ordained ruling elder of the church. On the 23d of November, 1662, the people unanimously expressed their desire to settle Mr. Joseph Elliot among them as a teacher. This appears to have been also the desire of Mr. Mather, the pastor; for on the 30th of December of the same year, the church voted unanimously, that two teaching officers were appointed as ordinances of Christ Jesus in his church, and that it was the duty of every church to do what in them lay, that they might be furnished with two teaching officers. In the language of the Cambridge platform, which they seem to have adopted, the office of pastor and teacher was distinct. The pastor's special work was to attend to exhortation, and therein to administer a word of wisdom. The teacher was to attend to doctrine, and therein to administer a word of knowledge. The ruling elder was to join with the pastor and teacher in acts of spiritual rule, in admitting members, ordaining officers, and excommunicating offenders, and to feed the flock of God with a word of admonition. The same distinction of offices had then been generally adopted in the colony; but soon after, it gradually ceased, and there is now, perhaps, no instance of its being preserved in any of the Congregational churches.

It appears from the records of the town, that Mr. Elliot assisted Mr. Mather in the ministry for a year or two, and a settlement and salary were offered him by the inhabitants, who agreed to build him a house; but he was never ordained as a public teacher in the town.

On the 12th of July, 1661, the town voted to build a meeting-house forty-two feet square. At the same time a committee was chosen to carry on and finish the work, which they afterwards completed accordingly.

The town had agreed in the year 1658, that the burying place should be on the meeting house hill, near the ground on which the present meeting house stands. But in October, 1661, they voted, that the place of burial on the meeting house hill should be altered, and a committee was chosen to find a more convenient place. At the next meeting in May, 1662, the committee reported in favor of the place, which has ever since been used for that purpose.

The first English inhabitants in Northampton formed their settlement in a wilderness when the savages were numerous, and when, excepting the town of Springfield, there were no white inhabitants of the state within eighty miles of this place.¹ Several of the first planters were of those who came from England in 1630, and first settled at Roxbury; some of them had moved in 1636 from Roxbury to Springfield. But it appears that many of the early settlers of this town were of the company, which sailed from Plymouth in England, March 30, 1630, and arrived at Nantasket on the 30th of May following. They first began a settlement at Dorchester. Their ministers were Mr. Warham and Mr. Maverick. In 1635 and 1636, Mr. Warham, and the greater part of his church, moved from Dorchester to Windsor in Connecticut.

Previous to Mr. Mather's settlement here, viz: on the 28th of April, 1661, he took a dismission from the church at Dorchester, and at the same time several others, who had moved to this town, and were members of the church in Dorchester, were dismissed from it, to join in gathering a church in Northampton. A number had also come from Windsor to settle here, who had accompanied Mr. Warham from the time he left England. From these men, who came from Windsor and Dorchester, and who were persons of exemplary virtue and piety, it is presumed that most of the present inhabitants of Northampton, Southampton, Westhampton and Easthampton are descended. The three last were originally part of Northampton.

Mr. Mather died on the 24th of July, 1669. By his wife, who was daughter of the Rev. Mr. Warham of Windsor, he left one daughter, who married the Rev. Mr. Williams of Deerfield, and was killed by the Indians, when that town was destroyed in February, 1704. In a publication of Dr. Increase Mather of Boston, who was a younger brother to Mr. Mather of this town, he is said to have preached at Northampton eleven years. It appears, therefore, that from the time he was invited to preach on probation in June, 1658, he continued to preach here three years before he was ordained. In the year 1671 a treatise was published under the title of "Serious exhortations to the present and succeeding generation in New England, earnestly calling upon them all to endeavour that the Lord's gracious presence may be continued with posterity ; being the substance of the four last Sermons preached at Northampton by the Rev. Eleazer Mather."

Soon after the death of Mr. Mather, Mr. Solomon Stoddard was invited to preach in this town ; and on the 4th of March, 1670, the town voted unanimously, that they hoped by the blessing of God to give Mr. Solomon Stoddard, on condition of his settlement among them, one hundred pounds yearly, as long as he continued among them, and carried on the work of the ministry alone. Mr. Stoddard continued to preach here, and on the 7th of February, 1672, he wrote a letter, addressed "to the Rev. John Strong, ruling elder of the Church of Christ in Northampton," accepting their call. In this letter, after referring to the invitation of the Church and people that he would undertake to be their pastor, he says, "Without eyeing that power and grace which God has treasured up in Jesus Christ, it were altogether vain for me to attempt such an undertaking. The best is, that when we have the command of God for our warrant, we have his promise both for assistance and pardon. I do therefore venture to declare, that it is my intention, sometime this next summer, to answer your desire in accepting of your invitation, giving up myself the residue of my days to the service of the house of God in this place; beseeching you, who are not altogether unacquainted with the difficulties, temptations and burdens of such a work, nor wholly strangers to my unfitness, to bow your knees to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, earnestly begging that he would fit me by his spirit for so solemn a charge, and make me a blessing unto you and your posterity; that I may be enabled to be a faithful steward, and that my labor may not be in vain; that light, and peace, and the power of religion may be continued in this plantation." Mr. Stoddard was accordingly ordained on the 11th of September, 1672. He married the widow of the Rev. Mr. Mather, and was an eminent and useful minister of the gospel in this place until his death, which happened on the 11th of February, 1729, in the eighty-sixth year of his age. His son, the Hon. John Stoddard was several years a member of the council, and held other important offices. The Hon. Joseph Hawley, who was his grandson, was also distinguished in public life, and was a liberal benefactor to the town.

In the life time of Mr. Stoddard, on the 29th of August, 1726, the town voted to invite Mr. Jonathan Edwards, whose mother was Mr. Stoddard's daughter, to assist the Rev. Mr. Stoddard in the work of the ministry; and on the 21st of November following, he was invited to settle among them in that office, and was ordained on the 15th of February, 1727.

On the 6th of November, 1735, the town voted to build a new meeting house, and raise and cover it by the end of the then next summer. This new meeting house was placed northeasterly from the old, and as near to it as might be; it was not finished until December, 1737. Before it was completed, viz: on the 13th of March, 1737, the front gallery of the old meeting house fell, when the people were assembled on the Sabbath for public worship; but through the goodness of God, though great numbers were upon and under the gallery, no one was killed or mortally wounded.

The Rev. Mr. Edwards continued in the ministry in this town more than twenty-three years, and was highly and universally esteemed and respected; but at length an unhappy disagreement arose between him and the major part of his people, concerning the qualifications for admission into the church, and in consequence of it, the pastoral relation between Mr.

Edwards and the church was dissolved on the 22d of June, 1750.

Some seventeen years later when another new colony was started by the people of Northampton and Hadley for some untried section further up the valley, they proposed to William Janes to go with his influence, his talents and his property, and to be their religious teacher, and counsellor in their expected perils. He consented, as he loved his mission of doing good and planting religion in every part of the new country so soon to be settled. He was the leader among this younger band of pilgrims and bold pioneers who gladly go forth to carry and spread the institutions of education and religion in their path.

He preached his first sermon on the Sabbath after their arrival under the spreading branches of a large oak tree.¹

Time passed on, and after the outbreak of King Philip's war, the savages carried fear and havoc among the white people thinly scattered over New England, and this small company so far out on the frontier suffered most bitterly from this cruel and savage foe. Being suddenly assaulted by a large and overwhelming number, eight of their men having already been waylaid and killed, they could only have hope of life by a strong defense in their stockade fort. But here they would sooner or later be destroyed, if no outward force could come to their aid. One of their bold young men ventures in the night to run the perilous gauntlet for thirty miles and inform their friends at Northampton and Hadley. Soon a company of young soldiers come to deliver them if possible from their alert and watchful foe. The Indians had posted themselves about a mile and a half from the fort in a formidable ravine where this company must pass to their friends.

Waylaid, while in the foot path of the forest, without any suspicion of danger, they were suddenly fired upon by the murderous savages, of whom a sufficient number had come from guarding the fort, to thwart the purpose of the whites, who were coming to the relief of their friends.

Capt. Beers, finding that the stealthy savages had him to great disadvantage, and that they might soon be entirely cut down, orders a retreat, and they flee at once to a rise of ground a mile nearly from this spot, now called Beers mountain, where they continue to defend themselves from the savages till Capt. Beers himself falls and all hope fails them as so many of their comrades are now weltering in their blood. Some twelve of them not killed or seriously wounded, flee on horseback or on foot as best they can for some possible retreat of safety. It is reported that in the chase one fell into a gully filled with the dry leaves of autumn, which so suddenly covered him that he considered himself comparatively safe, and in the quiet of the evening he ventured out and climbed a tree to see if possibly there might be any light of the fort which would serve to guide him in finding these white friends. He saw the light and followed in its direction on the bank of the river till he came near and gained the fort and reported the terrible disaster. The few soldiers who escaped to Northampton roused their friends to send out a more formidable and cautious band, who drove and scattered the Indians, and in carts brought away those who could not walk in their homeward travels.

These waiting Christian pioneers were sustained by an unfaltering faith in the power and kind providence of God. These earnest pilgrims — about twenty-five families — were safely conducted to Northampton and Hadley, their former homes. Among the persons killed by the Indians during their first stay in Northfield were Ebenezer and Jonathan Janes, sons of William, young lads of about seventeen and eighteen years of age.

Ten years later, 1685, they made another attempt at settlement, and continue for some five years in subduing the forest and building their rude habitations with little interruption. William Janes, it is believed, was in this second endeavor, venturing the perils of the times in company with only eight families, who were to enjoy only a short season of peaceful industry. Again were they driven away, losing almost all their earthly substance.

After this last attempt William Janes spent the remaining days of his life in Northampton, dying at a good old age, leaving behind a name revered, untarnished and imperishable.

In after years some of his children and grandchildren returned to this town (Northfield) and settled on the identical spot allotted to William in the first settlement, and the writer of this genealogy takes pride in saying he venerates the place made sacred by those early sacrifices, and lovely as the spot where first he breathed the vital air.

The early history of the town will be further known and understood by republishing a letter of Rev. John Hubbard, who was their third minister, and settled in 1750, some thirty-seven years after that last and successful attempt to occupy and cultivate these northern fields.

NORTHFIELD, Sept. 1, 1792.

In the year 1672 the township was granted to Messrs. Pinchon, Peirsons and their associates, the Indian name Squawkeague, laid out on both sides of Connecticut river, six miles in breadth, and twelve in length.

In the year 1673 settlers came on, planted down near one to the other, built small huts, covered them with thatch, near the centre made one for public worship, and employed one Elder Janes as their preacher, also ran a stockade and fort around a number of what they called houses, to which they might repair in case they were attacked by the enemy. These first settlers were a set of religious congregational people, emigrated from Northampton, Hadley, Hatfield, etc.

Probably in about five or six years, an Indian war broke out, a large army came suddenly upon them, killed some in their houses, others as they were coming out of the meadows; the rest of this distressed people, men, women and children fled to their fort, unable to sally out and repel the enemy, in the utmost distress, and no present relief could be afforded them. The Indians in the meantime kept around them, killed their cattle, destroyed their grain, burnt up the houses that were without the fort, and laid all waste. The dead bodies of their neighbors were unburied. The people full of fear lest the Indians would break into their fort. A number of days and nights were they in this distressed condition. In the meantime one of their brave men got out of the fort in the night and ran to Hadley near thirty miles.

A certain Captain Beers, with his company and a number of teams were ordered to go and bring off the distressed people. But when they had got within two miles of the settlement, on the 4th of September, were way-laid, almost all the company killed; and the teams taken. The few that survived this bloody carnage fled back to Hadley; then Captain Treat with a larger body of men, and more teams were ordered out, and fetched off the distressed inhabitants.

Thus long did these poor people continue in fear and jeopardy every hour. At length they arrived to the place above mentioned. The Indians soon returned and destroyed their fort and everything that remained. All was now desolate and waste, and continued so for about five or six years, the war ending. In 1685, settlers came on again, continued ten or twelve years, built mills and some convenient houses, and carried on their husbandry to a good degree, and introduced mechanics. The settlement flourished, however had not arrived to such ability as to settle a minister, though they began to hire some preaching. But alas! another Indian war breaking out the people were drove within their forts, which they had erected.

Government afforded them some protection, notwithstanding the Indians pressed hard upon them, killed some and took others captive, and the hearts of the rest of the people were dismayed and discouraged, and in council on the 2d of September, in 1690, having lost seven or eight men, determined it was best to return to the lower towns. This they did, late in the fall or beginning of winter, when the Indians had withdrawn. The next spring the Indians came on, burnt up a second time, laid the settlement waste. This brings us to the year 1700 or more, a little before Deerfield was destroyed.

In the year 1713 the proprietors petitioned the general court to grant them a committee to ascertain and fix the boundaries of their home lots, meadow lots, etc. The committee were the Hon. John Stoddard of Northampton, Eleazer Porter of Hadley, Henry Dwight of Hatfield, Esqrs. Settlers came on very much together, rebuilt their mills, houses, and soon proceeded to set up a house of public worship, and were now incorporated into a town by the name of Northfield, as it was the northernmost town in the county of Hampshire and colony of the Massachusetts, on Connecticut river.

About the year 1718 — were gathered into a distinct church, invited and settled Mr. Benjamin Doolittle of Wallingford in Connecticut, who continued in the ministry about thirty years, died 1748, aged fifty-four years. He began with the people in their third settlement, where not more than thirty-five families lived, to see them increase almost to a hundred and to a good degree of opulence and wealth, though oft worried with distressing wars, it being very much a frontier. It was in Mr. Doolittle's¹ day that the province line was run between New Hampshire and Massachusetts, which cut off one-third part or more of the original town, and is now Hinsdale. In the year 1750 the people invited and settled Mr. John Hubbard of Hatfield, who has continued in the ministry more than forty years. We are not more than a hundred and twenty families at this present time.

The air is salubrious, and the soil tolerably fertile. No Indians nor any of their monuments appear. Northfield is southward of the centre of the settlement of Connecticut river. The people are all furnished with Bibles and other good books, in their houses, but no social library. Generally a grammar and other good schools exist in town. The most of the people pursue husbandry; it is an excellent township for raising wheat and other kinds of grain. Commerce has flourished, and is now again reviving. It has a number of good buildings, an elegant house for the worship of God. Of late, a curious still-house has been set up for making gin; this I fear will be of no public utility.

The people are pretty well united in faith, worship and Christian discipline. No sectaries.

JOHN HUBBARD.

The year 1662 was an eventful year to William Janes. In January he lost his son Nathaniel, in February he lost Elisha next older, in April he lost his first wife Mary, and in November of the same year he married (2) Hannah Broughton.

Also the year 1675 was a similar year in affliction. In September, his two sons, Ebenezer and Jonathan, were killed by the Indians in Northfield: Jacob died 28th of October in New Haven, and Jeremiah died the 1st March previous, and during the fall of the same year the father and small colony at Northfield were driven from their settlement and despoiled of most of their goods.

With a servant of old he could say, "All these things are against me." Like other suffering pilgrims, "he fought a good fight and kept the faith."

We have not a full record of deaths and afflictive occurrences, and know not what other trials were bravely and heroically met and with fortitude surmounted. Faint glimpses only are seen when there are brief upliftings of the curtain.

William Janes preached the first sermon at Northfield under the shade of an oak, the year 1673, the first Sabbath, the first colony arrived, believed to be the first Sabbath of June. Rev. Benjamin Doolittle, a surgeon as well as a divine, native of Wallingford, son of John, who was son of Abraham Doolittle, was born 10th July, 1695, graduated at Yale College 1716. He was engaged 15th August, 1718. He signed a new agreement 10th March, 1738. He died suddenly 9th January, 1748, thirtieth year of his ministry, æ. fifty-four. His epitaph expressed the combination of the two professions, of spiritual and natural healer. A large posterity of Doolittles¹ are his descendants.

Rev. John Hubbard was engaged 5th March, 1749. He was highly esteemed among his people, and exerted considerable influence during a long ministry of forty-five years; he died 28th March, 1794, æ.

eighty-nine. The first stockade fort was built on a gentle rise of land four or five rods above the Oliver Mattoon house, the most suitable location in the immediate vicinity.

The writer well remembers the foundation stones before they were removed or covered with earth. It was at first surrounded with a compact paling of sharpened poles for a barricade and some other rude defense, and within the inclosure was a number of small dwellings for the convenience of different families. Some of the proprietors came to Northfield as early as 1673.

The Indians gave deeds of lands, which they claimed. The colony took a right from the general court of a tract of twelve miles by six; that is, from Miller's river to Ashuelot river, and three miles east and three west from the Connecticut river. This was afterward materially reduced by laying out new towns and by running the state line of New Hampshire.

In the second settlement, 1687, John King and William Clark came up and made arrangements with the Indians—who were then in a friendly mood—for the proprietors who lived in Northampton and Hadley.

Beside the sons of William Janes, killed by the Indians, Joseph, Samuel and Benjamin are on record as land holders. Samuel was killed at Northampton. His son Jonathan, who met with so narrow an escape at the time, being only eight years of age, had arrived to manhood when the third settlement was made, and then, or soon after, perhaps 1717, came to Northfield as the only representative of the family at that time.

In 1725, his Uncle Benjamin came from Coventry, Conn., to abide for a time, and to adjust his claims as coheir with others of the family. He owned by allotment or purchase the lot north and adjoining the old homestead which was originally assigned to William Janes; but soon after the third and final or successful settlement possessed by Jonathan Janes, his grandson, who was the writer's great-grandfather. This Jonathan had an older brother, Samuel, who had with him escaped the tragic death struggles at Pascomac, who was with him a joint owner of lands in Northampton and Northfield. They made a settlement, Samuel relinquishing the father's and uncle's rights, which inhered now in these two brothers. Jonathan's quit claim deed to lands in Northampton was doubtless in substance the same as this of Samuel's, which we here insert, being executed one hundred and thirty-four years ago.

We love to have pictured upon the canvas the scenes of other days, the memories of our fathers' trials and triumphs, the histories of their conflicts, their successes, or their misfortunes. We love to linger around the dear old hearthstone the reminiscences of our progenitors, the histories of their civil, military and religious acts, the heroic struggles through which their deep and unshaken faith has carried them. We love to speak of their virtues and dwell upon their revered names, and note their works and ways and varied transactions; especially when we remember that they were of the same blood; that because they were, we are also.

Our hearts may be filled with sadness when we recount the many sorrows that filled the stricken hearts of a few brave men and courageous women, huddled together for a number of days in a frail, ill contrived fort, with hideous savages around them, outnumbering them ten to one. Perhaps a greater sadness comes over us as we rehearse the tragic fate of Captain Beers and most of his bold comrades who valiantly met, but unsuccessfully struggled with a more stealthy and a more numerous foe. William Janes, in this rude fort at Northfield, with his weeping but hopeful companions, thus saw and felt their danger; yet a beam of joy lightened their sadness, as their faith lifted them up to a full trust in the covenant keeping God. Two of his sons had been slain by the roamers of the forest, and there were probably one or two others in the fort, with this distressed company, sharing a common sorrow.

But long before Northfield was settled, the older sons of William Janes were living apart from their father, commencing life for themselves, and laying the foundation for social, religious and intelligent society, and shaping, each for themselves, their way for gaining a livelihood among men.

We might have written more minutely about William Janes, our progenitor, whose life stretches over a comparatively brief but marked period¹ of the world's history. We might have written more fully of the places he helped to settle and of his labors as a registrar, a copyist, a secular, moral and religious teacher. He was called Elder Janes, and was truly a teaching and preaching elder in distinction from a ruling elder, which was fully understood at that period. His secular labors were not remitted, and it was not expected he would forego any opportunity to push forward the laudable endeavors of this new and anxious colony. When the war began, Hampshire county contained the following towns and plantations : Springfield — including West Springfield and Long meadow — Westfield, Northampton, Hadley, Hatfield, Deerfield, Northfield, Brookfield and Suffield. The people at Suffield soon left the place, and if there were any settlers at Swampfield (Sunderland), they did not long remain. September 2d, they set upon several men that were gone out of the fort at Squakheag ; they slew eight of our men, not above one of them being slain that we know of ; but made no attempt upon the fort. The next day, (September 3d), this onset being unknown, Capt. Beers set forth from Hadley with about thirty-six men and some carts to fetch off the garrison at Squakheag, and coming within less than two miles of the place, the next morning (September 4th), were set upon by a great number of Indians from the side of a swamp, where was a hot dispute for some time. They, having lost their captain and some others, resolved at last to fly, and going to take horse, lost several men more, I think about twelve. The most that escaped got to Hadley that evening. Next morning another came in, and at night another that had been taken by the Indians, and loosed from his bonds by a Natick Indian. He tells that the Indians were all drunk that night; that they mourned much for the loss of a great captain; that the English had killed twenty-five of their men. Six days after, another soldier came in, who had been lost ever since the fight and was almost famished, and so lost his understanding that he knew not what day the fight was on. On the 5th day of September (Thursday), Major Treat set forth for Squakheag with above a hundred men. Next day coming nigh Squakheag his men were much daunted to see the heads of Capt. Beers's soldiers upon poles by the wayside. After they were come to Squakheag, some were fired upon by about fourteen Indians. Major Treat was struck upon the thigh, but not harmed. Coming to the fort, he concluded forthwith to bring off the garrison, so they came away the same night (September 6th), leaving the cattle there, and the dead bodies unburied; since which seventeen of their cattle came a great part of the way themselves, and have since been fetched into Hadley.

Mather says the men fought till their powder and shot were spent, and the Indians killed above twenty, and only thirteen escaped. A cart with some ammunition fell into the hands of the enemy. According to Hubbard, Capt. Beers went up with supplies for the garrison, and they were set upon very near to the town, out of the bushes, by a swamp side, and Capt. Beers and about twenty of his men were slain.

The swampy ravine south of the village of Northfield, where the Indians were in ambush, and Beers Plain, across which the soldiers retreated to their horses, are well known at this day. Men now living have found bones and bullets near where the fighting took place.

About 1823 two entire skeletons were seen wholly uncovered from the blowing and shifting of the sand upon the Reuben Smith plain, which was the battle ground of the first struggle Captain Beers had with the enemy. The sons of Simeon Holton saw them after a severe wind, and their father told Dr. Charles Blake, who took them away for anatomical purposes.

The writer himself has seen many of the different bones of a human body, particularly the skeletons of human heads, when a youth he passed and repassed that way to go to his father's pasture and return. A monument should have been, and we hope will yet be erected in memory of the heroes, who so early fell in defending their friends from ferocious enemies.

Mr. Russell, in his list, reports only sixteen slain at Squakheag, September 4th, and gives the names of eleven, viz: Capt. R. Beers, John Chenery, Ephraigh Childs, Benjamin Crackbone, Robert Pepper, George Syruess, John Gatchell, James Miller, John Wilson, Joseph Dickinson (of Northfield), William Markham, Jr. (of Hadley, an only son; he was with a team), Robert Pepper, erroneously numbered among the slain, was taken, and was with the Indians when Mrs. Rowlandson was a captive. Capt. Beers was from Watertown, and was in the Pequot war thirty-eight years before. His widow died June 19th, 1706, aged 92.

Hubbard says, one man if not more, was found with a chain hooked into his under jaw, and so hung upon the bough of a tree. It was feared that he was hung up alive. Cattle often fled from the Indians and sought the protection of the English. When Major Willard came near Brookfield, the cattle which had been frightened away by the yells and firing of the Indians, fell into his rear, and followed him and his company into the village. In this, and later Indian wars, the people were always alarmed when the cattle ran furiously out of the woods to the village.

After Major Treat left Northfield, September 6th, the Indians destroyed this small village. This was the second place in Hampshire county that was laid waste. It had been settled only two or three years, but contained nearly as many families as Brookfield. Most of them were from Northampton. They had no minister or meeting house, but William Janes, a competent person, used to pray and exhort in pleasant weather, under a broad-spreading tree.

The Nipmucks and Wampanoags, whom the English captain had long sought after in vain, first showed themselves upon Connecticut river on the 1st day of September, and made an attack upon Hadley. As our river Indians were engaged the same day at Deerfield, these must have been the Indians which came from the east. And it can hardly be doubted that they killed the eight men at Northfield, September 2d, attacked Captain Beers, September 4th, and fired upon Major Treat, September 6th. They exulted in their success; and, after Northfield was deserted, lived upon the good things which the English had left. They seemed not to have crossed the river and united with the river Indians until about the middle of September. Every town had to entertain soldiers, and the upper villages had families from Deerfield, Northfield and Brookfield. The people of Hampshire were able to supply all with food.

Eleven Indians appeared near Northfield, and some of them were recognized as Indians who formerly lived in these parts. On the 16th of August, three men, two women and a girl were killed at Northfield, and it was believed that they were murdered by these Indians. Major Pynchon sent soldiers to Northfield, and thirteen men were sent up from Hartford. By order of Governor Andros, in November sixty Connecticut men were posted at Northfield under Captain Jonathan Bull during the winter. The destruction of six persons at Northfield is not noticed by any historian, and their names cannot now be found.

The tears, fears and groans of the broken remnant of Northfield is the beginning of a petition from that place to the general court, dated June 27, 1689, in the hand writing of Rev. John Russell of Hadley. They say that they had twenty-five families before the six persons were slain by the Indians, and that half had since deserted the place, and only twelve families remained.

They ask for advice and help. Peter Tilton, Samuel Partridge and John King were appointed to order matters at Northfield. About seventy souls, of whom only fifteen were men, remained in the place until the spring of 1690, when Northfield was abandoned the second time, and remained desolate twenty-five years. Hadley was again the most northern town on the east side of the river.

A new fort and garrison were added in February, 1724.

On the 3d of that month Timothy Dwight with soldiers, carpenters and teams left Northampton and went up the river, and in a few weeks they built a block house named Fort Dummer, on the equivalent land, a mile or two below the present Brattleborough, which cost £256. This was the first building erected by civilized beings in Vermont. Captain Timothy Dwight¹ commanded the garrison at this fort till the close of 1726. Captain Joseph Kellogg, a native of Hadley, commanded at Northfield; Captain Samuel Barnard, and afterwards Lieutenant Timothy Childs, commanded at Deerfield. Captain Benjamin Wright, formerly of Northampton then of Northfield, was always ready to fight Indians, and he was at the head of several scouts and expeditions up the river and towards Lake Champlain, in this war.

We have now traced our first progenitor,¹ the emigrant, from the place of his origin to his settlement in New Haven, where he resided about eighteen years, giving a condensed view of the primitive condition of that early and prosperous colony; thence to Northampton, Mass., where he spent the most active period of his earthly pilgrimage, giving the early history of that, then frontier town; thence to Northfield, the northernmost attempted settlement, for many years, the gloomy scene of many tragic conflicts; where William Janes went with the first bold adventurers of the day, and where he probably went a second time, ten years later than the first venture; where the fire and the tomahawk made sad devastation among his noble sons, and wasted most of his estate; where he preached under the shade of the noble old oak still standing; where his life was frequently periled and miraculously preserved; where his descendants at a ¹ In the lifetime of William Janes there was no newspaper published in America.

The year of his decease, (20th of September, 1690), one small sheet was worked off upon a hand press at Boston, by Richard Pierce, printer, on the 25th of September, five days after William Janes's recorded death. This insignificant little sheet was condemned by the authorities as containing "reflections of a high nature," and its publication pronounced contrary to law. The unfortunate little intruder was strangled, and has had a perpetual lock jaw among the unseen state papers of the state department in London. Such an honor poor Pierce did not dream of, when he ventured boldly to utter by such means the public sentiment.

later period settled on lands selected by him or allotted to him, when the storm of Indian war was abated; giving a brief history of this well known township of trying memories, where some of the family of the Janeses have had a residence from the commencement.

These brief allusions we are constrained to make, as we close this account of this beloved man, our ancestor, and the short sketch of the towns where his influence was spent and his principles displayed; and the scenes through which he passed as a self-denying, cheerful pilgrim, were enacted.

Can ye lead out to distant colonies
The o'erflowings of a people, or your wrong'd
Brethren, by impious persecution driven,
And arm their breasts with fortitude to try
New regions; climes though barren, yet beyond
The baleful power of tyrants? These are deeds
To which their hardy labors will prepare
The sinewy arm of Albion's sons.—Coleridge.

Yes, in the desert there is built a home
For Freedom. Genius is made strong to rear
The monuments of man beneath the dome
Of a new heaven; myriads assemble there
Whom the proud lords of man, in rage or fear, Drove from their wasted homes.—Shelley.

NOTE. Elisha, Nathaniel, Abel and Abigail were baptized 19 March, 1648, by the Reverend John Davenport, and printed in the New England Historical and Genealogical Register, as children of Thomas James; but in calling the attention of Henry White to the subject who got it copied for the New England Historical and Genealogical Register, he reexamined the record and saw it written, "children of Bro. James;" still a mistake by the original writer or transcriber, who should have written "of William Janes."

In looking at the records in Springfield, we find that "Nathaniel Janes of Northampton who sojourned here a little tyme, fell sick and dyed ye 22d day of Jany., 1662. Elisha Janes, an elder brother, also fell sick here and died, ye 11 Feb., 1662."

William married (2) 20 Nov., 1662, Hannah Broughton, widow of John Broughton, who died March, 1681.

The Grand Divisions.

Preliminary to the introduction of the succeeding generations, it is proper to remark, that only four of the eleven sons of William Janes married and raised up families. The others died early, or were killed by the Indians, except Joseph. We shall find it convenient to constitute four grand divisions with the families of these four married sons, viz: Abel, William, Samuel and Benjamin. We designate the first division as the line of Abel. The second as the line of William. The third as the line of Samuel, and the fourth as the line of Benjamin.

In examining the book and in tracing back the ancestral line of any individual, the whole printed plan will present itself like a chart to the mind, and be easily comprehended.

It is well to notice the remarks on the last page of the Introduction, and by keeping in mind the line with which any one is connected, the arrangement will seem plain to any person, and further simplification appears to be wholly unnecessary.

Abel Janes, b. about 1644, m. Mary Judd, dau. of William Judd, of Farmington, Conn., 4 Nov., 1679, and resided, as it appears, most of the time in Northampton, till the year 1706. He moved to Lebanon about this time; and, as his children were born previously, we looked for the date of their birth, without success, in the records of Northampton. We have found most of the names of their children, doubtless, but not all, we fear.¹

He was an early pioneer to this town, and was highly esteemed as an intelligent father, friend and counsellor, leading a respectable family of influential children and grand-children in the paths of virtue and true religion. When he died, 18 December, 1718, he left behind him the legacy of a good name, that his children might profit by his example. From him and his children has come down an influence for morality, for patriotism, and pure religion, which will continue to extend and bless other generations.

His son William, and five of his grandsons, moved from Lebanon to Brinfield, Mass., purchased five hundred acres of land, became wealthy farmers, and a number of the descendants still remain in the town and in the vicinity, while numbers have gone with virtuous and patriotic principles to distant towns and cities throughout the Union.

There is a deed on record at Springfield, dated 28 May, 1705, Abel Janes is mentioned then as resident of Northampton. In the latter part of this or the next year, he moved to Lebanon.

Another deed was made of Northampton lands, and recorded in Springfield, 1716; he was then living in Lebanon.

A quit claim deed from Samuel and Jonathan, the compiler's great-grandfather, dated 28 March, 1716, to Abel, says, "These presents witnesseth that we, Samuel Janes and Jonathan Janes of Northampton, county of Hampshire, in the province of Massachusetts bay, in New England, for and in consideration of a certain instrument bearing date with these presents, receive of our uncle, Abel Janes of Lebanon, etc."

6 (VI) RUTH, DAUGHTER OF WILLIAM.

Ruth m. John Searl, 3 July, 1667, at Northampton. She was a victim of the Pascomac massacre, severely wounded, but afterwards recovered, being rescued from the Indians, as they were fleeing before their white pursuers.

Her young son, Elisha, was taken to Canada, while three of his brethren were savagely murdered.¹

¹The savages learning they were being intercepted, commenced killing the young lads they had kept for captives, and Elisha, foreseeing his fate, caught a pack and gave them to understand that he could help them, and ran along ahead, and they spared his life believing he would serve them truly.

All they succeeded in taking to Canada, as prisoners, were Elisha Searl, aged nine years, Esther, wife of Benoni Jones (an Ingersoll), who died in Canada from persecution and hardships, and her niece, Margaret Huggins, aged nineteen, who returned. When Elisha Searl returned to see his friends, he could not speak to them intelligently in his mother tongue, and had to make himself known by signs. He discovered at home the identical stilts which he had used when a boy, and taking them in hand, and walking with them, seemed to entirely Elisha returned to Northampton, 1722, being from home among the Indians and French Catholics eighteen years, and was with reluctance constrained to remain, the government aiding by a military appointment.

Like some other New England children, he had been taught the Catholic religion, and was now strongly attached to this faith, and the Indian mode of life. As he was about to embark up the lakes on a trapping and fishing expedition with some Indians, he inquired of the priest what he should do on the way, as they would have no priest to confess to. The priest told him to confess to a tree, saying that would do just as well. He lost, by degrees, confidence in such a system, and in time embraced fully the protestant belief.

Three years later we find him a lieutenant, under Capt. Timothy Dwight, at Fort Dummer, a short distance south of the village of Brattleboro, Vt., who commanded on this northern frontier. He afterwards convince them of his identity. When reluctant to remain away from Canada, his friends held out to him whatever inducement was in their power, and the government kindly interposed and appointed him lieutenant under Captain Timothy Dwight, who was sent up to build and command Fort Dummer, about a mile south of the now village of Brattleboro, Vermont.

Capt. Dwight's lieutenant was Elisha Searl of Northampton, who had been many years a captive among the Indians, and had seen the vast prairies of the west. Capt. Kellogg had been a captive, and had seen the Mississippi.

After this sudden slaughter of her three sons and her husband, and the capture of her youngest child, Ruth changed her widowhood for the relation of wife again, marrying Nathaniel Alexander of Northampton, then a widower.

settled down on the old homestead, and raised up a family, many of whose descendants may be found there and in the neighboring towns. His mother had a silver hair pin or stay peculiar to the times, which was preserved, and is still an heir-loom in the family of some of her descendants.

The three former were probably killed when the others were knocked on the head and left for dead, some of whom recovered.

8 (VIII) WILLIAM, SON OF WILLIAM.

William Janes, son of William, settled in Stratford, was a prominent man in the state, as a leader in the first Episcopal society organized in Connecticut.

He chose to leave the Congregational order which had nursed him and fed his Christian faith, and join in a new enterprise — the establishment of another church not yet planted in the state.

History says of him "He took a leading part in organizing an Episcopal church in Stratford, as early as 1709. In 1710, he presented the case of the Episcopal church of Stratford to the general assembly of the colony, asking relief from taxation for the support of the established church."

He was one of the church-wardens and vestry-men, and was an applicant to the society for the propagation of the gospel in foreign parts, for a missionary. George Pigot was the first missionary sent there, and his labors were acceptable among the people.

It is a subject of regret that we have so little knowledge of the family of this son of the first William. If a clear, full and well authenticated chain of evidence could have come down to us concerning his family, his descendants of after generations, it would have been gratifying. Notwithstanding, there is so little upon record, we feel confident we have the true line of those here called his descendants. But no one will wonder that there is some obscurity, when informed, that Michael, his only son on record, went south to Charleston, South Carolina, and remained some years, so that links in the chain of history might be wanting where we have diligently looked for them. What children sprang from his only son Michael, we know not, but are led to conclude that those in Richmond, in Petersburg and in different parts of Maryland, were his offspring.

William Janes m. Sarah Clark, dau. of James Clark of New Haven. Her mother was Deborah, who died 1705, dau. of John Pecoke, of Stratford. He died, November, 1726. She died, October, 1738.

Mrs. Clark's grave-stone is still seen in Stratford.

William Janes was married at thirty years of age, and probably his sister, who united with the Congregational church, 1697, kept his house till he married Sarah Clark.¹

13 (XIII) SAMUEL, SON OF WILLIAM.

Samuel Janes, son of William by (2) wife Hannah, born in Northampton, was a husbandman. He settled in a part of the town called Pascomac, about a mile and a half from the centre of Northampton, with some four or five other families who felt in a measure secure from the incursions of the Indians. He married (1) Elizabeth Smead, in 1680. She died, so far as known, without issue. He married (2) Sarah Hinsdale, 1692. From this time some twelve years were passed in the social enjoyments of a Christian home, with his wife and children born to them, when most suddenly on an unfortunate morning, his household was assaulted and cloven down by the hand of a ruthless and savage foe.¹

Himself, wife and three children were cut down at once, and soon after on the way, when the Indians were pursued by a small company from the town, the two older sons, Samuel and Jonathan, who, with some others were captives on their way to Canada, were struck, stunned, tomahawked, and left for dead. This occurred on the 13 May, 1704, old style, or 24 May, present reckoning, and is recorded upon the books of the town, at the time, which the compiler has seen, together with an account of the administration of the property of Samuel Janes, and some incidental notices of his brothers and family.

The two surviving sons, Samuel and Jonathan, grew up and settled, one in Pascomac, and the other, at Northfield. Concerning these Indians, it was afterward ¹They were called a company of French and Indians, who fell upon a fortified house in Pascomuck, where no watch was kept. The people were alarmed in their beds by a noise of the enemy's rushing on the house, and before the inhabitants could arise the Indians had got their guns into the port-holes, and shot those that first appeared, and wounded others. The surprised people made what resistance they could, firing briskly on the enemy, but the house being set on fire, they were forced to yield. Fearing a pursuit, the enemy sent back a messenger to say that if they were pursued they would kill all the captives. (It is said this messenger was an old man, and stopped to rest and fell asleep). The whites pursued; three made an escape, eight were rescued, nineteen were slain, and three carried captive to Canada. Seven knocked on the head, recovered. Among the nineteen killed, were nine by the name of Janes. Two knocked on the head that recovered, were the boys, Samuel Janes, aged eleven, and Jonathan Janes, aged eight, whose father, mother, and other children were destroyed at the time.—Wars of New England, p. 15.

confessed by them, that they were so very hungry and nearly famished, that they thought seriously of giving themselves up to the white people, so they might obtain food for themselves, but inspired with hope of an easy victory, and reward from the French in Canada, for scalps and captives, and seeing from Mount Tom, the day previously, the situation of the houses, and the intervening flood that would protect them from the town's people, they venture to attack, in the gray of the morning, these isolated inhabitants before the people had waked from their slumbers, and surprise and kill and capture as many as were to be found, and with hasty eating and securing of provisions, push on towards Canada.

Benjamin Janes was spared to carry their provisions. He was ordered to empty his straw bed, nothing else being more convenient, and to put into it his pork, and carry it along with them. As he was encumbered with his load, he lagged a little behind, purposely, and near a small ravine leading down to the water where he knew a boat was tied, he dropped quite suddenly his burden, and escaping observation by the friendly covering of shade trees, and running down leaped into the boat, and pushed away toward the other side and hastily rowed himself over to relate to the villagers the horrid scenes that had just passed before his eyes. In the summer of 1865, the writer visited these grounds, and noticed particularly this identical ravine through which he escaped from savage hands, to give notice of the sad condition of his unfortunate neighbors and friends.

The few rescuers and defenders of the slaughtered or captured neighbors, hastily rushed around the flood, then spreading over thousands of acres in Northampton, and in what is now East Hampton, intercepting the Indians, who suddenly turned to kill and scalp as many as they could, and defended themselves till they could get a better start with their booty and a few captives which they chose to take with them.

In this hasty skirmish, the captain of the company more bold than prudent, was killed, and the Indians cowardly fled with scalps and some captives who could not break away from them with any hope of life.

The descendants of Samuel Janes, Jr., keep the tradition of his being stunned by a blow from a tomahawk, and also the descendants of his brother Jonathan, the Northfield branch, where Jonathan settled, equally well remember the story of their progenitors, that Jonathan experienced the same tragic stunning. No doubt both were struck and wounded at this juncture, for the Indians saw plainly that this attack of the whites would deprive them of their captives whom now they determined to kill, and scalp if possible. The writer, when a youth, had many conversations with, and cannot but well remember the tradition of his great aunt, Hannah (Oliver) Janes, daughter of this Jonathan, who had often heard from the lips of her own father the account, which, though occurring at so early an age, was vividly pictured on the tablet of his memory, so much of it being witnessed by himself. On what a slender thread is suspended the lives of the sons of men. It was indeed a slender thread on which the destinies of hundreds of families were hung, who have since multiplied and spread themselves over the country, and are here partially recorded.

16 (XVI) BENJAMIN, SON OF WILLIAM.

Benjamin was born 1672; the year before his father, went to Northfield with the first pioneers of the new colony, to locate themselves in a new settlement.

He was thirty-two years of age when his wife and ¹Hannah was daughter of Samuel Hinsdale of Hadley, who married Mehitable Johnson, perhaps daughter of Humphry Johnson of Roxbury. Sarah's mother, Mehitable, married (2) John Root, (3) Deacon John Colman. Samuel's father, Robert Hinsdale, moved to Deerfield. He married (1) Ann, (2) Elizabeth a widow. He, with his sons John and Samuel, were slain at the fearful massacre at Bloody Brook. His children are believed to be by his first wife, Ann. Most of our great-grandmother's near relations were thus early killed by the Indians.

children, his brother Samuel, and his family, and their few neighbors were suddenly and violently assaulted, and many of them murdered or taken captive by the savages who roamed the forest and were easily excited against the whites, but had recently turned into bitter enmity through the influence of King Philip.

It was about the year 1700 that Samuel and Benjamin moved out from the village of Northampton to this settlement (two miles out), called Pascomac.

Immediately after the massacre, the Indians, for fear of the exasperated white inhabitants, hastened away from these desolated cottages, and learning that troops were coming from the town to intercept them on the west, they commenced killing and scalping their prisoners that they might take, in their escape at least, their scalps; some were only stunned by a blow, others were killed and scalped. Samuel and Jonathan, sons of Samuel, were thus stunned and escaped death. The wife of Benjamin was found farther away from this scene on the side of Pomeroy's mountain, scalped and nearly dead.¹

On their return from their pursuit, they found some of them coming to consciousness who were supposed dead. Hannah, the wife of Benjamin, was found on the side of this mountain sitting and leaning against a log, and stroking the blood from her forehead and eyes. Her infant was dashed against the door post, before they started on their way to free the captive mother from any incumbrance that would impede her travel, and they left her scalped just where they came to the conclusion that they could only take her scalp in safety and avoid being overtaken by just avengers.

She was taken to the village on a litter, and by much care and attention was so far revived as to give hope of final recovery.

Afterward she was taken to Westfield, and under the care of Dr. Gershom Buckley and other surgeons, she finally rose from a long confinement and years of suffering to the comforts of life.

About the year 1712 or 1713 they moved from Wethersfield to Coventry, with other pioneers, for a newer settlement, where land was cheap or free, and the hope of a good living was promising. During these latter years God gave them other children to comfort their desolated hearts, whose descendants are more numerous than that of any other member of the family.

We wish we could trace the parentage of one whose life so trembled in the balance or by some means obtain the maiden name of this heroic sufferer, but all effort seems vain and fruitless. How many years Benjamin continued in this newer colony, which was only a few miles from his brother Abel's, we have not fully ascertained, but about the year 1722 we find him and some of his family in Northfield where his father had obtained title to lands which no one of the other children lived to occupy. Here he was an officer in the church, and was chosen constable in 1725, and was a useful citizen in this Christian settlement, where he desired to contribute his part to advance purity and true religion, as he had endeavored to promote the best interest of the church and people while in Coventry. He always took an active part with the self-denying men in promoting the fundamental principles of Christianity and the blessings it carries in its train. Wherever he sojourned, he was a pattern of noble goodness, zealous in the cause of education and true piety.

His sons remained in Coventry, and probably Benjamin settled with his nephew Jonathan and others at Northfield, who purchased his estate, and he returned in time to his old home in Coventry to spend his last days among his early friends, and where his sons afterward married and raised up their families.

- 69 XIII. PHINEAS, born 26 June, 1726 ; died 1747.

Without entering into the history of all the children of Ruth Janes, who married Ebenezer Chapin, we will record the following facts which have come to our knowledge :

Reuben and Charles had large families in Salisbury. David had a family in New Hartford, Conn. Rev. Mr. Backus of Somers, who delivered a sermon at the funeral of Moses Chapin, who died 3d of November, 1793, said, "He died in the eighty-second year of his age, and his father died in the ninety-seventh year of his age."

He had thirteen children, eleven sons and two daughters; three of the sons are yet living. That eight out of thirteen in one family should exceed the age of three-score and ten, is very remarkable, even for a healthy climate, and has been rarely equaled since the days of the patriarchs. A little more than six years ago, five of the brothers were living in this town, their farms joined, and there was no neighbor between them; with sincere fraternal affection they lived together, pursuing the agricultural employment for more than forty years. Of Ebenezer's eleven sons, six, viz: Ebenezer, Noah, Moses, Seth, Elias and Aaron, settled on Somers mountain, their farms joined; and, after a time, Ebenezer went back to take charge of his father's, and he died in Enfield. Ebenezer, of six generations, has lived on and occupied the same farm in Enfield. One of that name is still living on the same place; the other five who went to Somers, lived and died there. We well know that many other interesting facts might be gathered and communicated concerning this remarkable family. They were intelligent, stable and Christian.

22 (VI) WILLIAM, SON OF ABEL.

William Janes was the prominent son and leading member of the family of Abel Janes. He raised up a large and honored family of sons and daughters. He was the favorite son of the family, and was at home with father and mother till some time after the death of his father, Abel (1718), and in time moved with all, or nearly all his family, from his native place, Lebanon, Conn., to lands he purchased for himself and sons in Brimfield, Mass. From records of the town of Brimfield, its settlement was commenced in 1717, and William Janes, grandson of the first William, the emigrant, was among the first, or nearly so, in purchasing and preparing for the future abode of his family. He might have removed there with his young family as soon as a part of his five hundred acre purchase was cleared and partially improved, and convenient buildings erected for their occupancy. The dates are not at hand to determine the point. But his oldest son was not born till 1713, and his youngest son was born in 1734. Their births are all recorded in Lebanon, and his mother, Mary, died in Lebanon 1736. The distance being about forty miles from Lebanon to Brimfield, no doubt a part of the family remained till after the death of their grandmother, Mary, and perhaps all of them spent their winters there till Brimfield could be made to seem to them a real home. His oldest, Jonathan, married Irene Bradford, granddaughter of Governor Bradford, of whom we make record on another page.

FOURTH GENERATION.

LINE OF WILLIAM.

31 (I) MICHAEL, SON OF WILLIAM.

Michael Janes's son, 2d William, went to Charleston, South Carolina, when about twenty-one years of age; probably married late in life, following the example of his father.

Michael married

After returning north, and to Stratford, about 1730, and spending some years with his mother and sisters, he may have gone to Maryland or Virginia with his young family, or taken a wife there and gone north again, though there is found no record. The history of his early sojourn south would be a theme of conversation in the family; and the minds of some of the sons would be naturally guided in that direction. Hence, William, if that was his name, settled in Maryland, and some of his sons in Richmond.

Michael may have continued and died south, or some of his sons, probably William, hearing of the soil, climate, etc., through his father, may have gone to Richmond, before or after marriage. Miss Paine was the maiden name of his son's wife. Two sons of William, Thomas and David, resided for sometime in Richmond. Thomas married and had a family; was a distinguished architect; many of the buildings now standing in Richmond, were constructed by him; and when he died, his brother David went north among his old friends in New England, where he might, if he needed, obtain consolation in his bereavement.

The fact that Michael purchased property in Stratford, and became a landholder adjoining his mother's land, gives color to the idea that he left Charleston permanently, and perhaps only some of his sons went to Virginia and Maryland.

92 I. WILLIAM, born 1733; married Miss Paine.

93 II. THOMAS, born 1738; married Rachel Lines, Wallingford, Connecticut.

Probably others.

32 (II) ESTHER, DAUGHTER OF WILLIAM.

Esther Janes married Abraham Beardsley, son of John and Abigail Wakelyn, and was born 6 March, 1696. John was the second son of Joseph Beardsley, and was born November, 1668. This Joseph, born 1634, was the second son of William and Mary Beardsley, who were among the first settlers of Stratford, Conn., which settlement was begun 1639.

He embarked from London in the ship Planter, April, 1635. He came to Boston, and was admitted a freeman in Massachusetts, 7 December, 1636; emigrating afterward to Stratford with other planters, and was an original proprietor of that ancient town.

William Beardsley is described in the Custom House records, London, as a mason. The proportion of masons among the early emigrants to New England was very small, less than one in a hundred. He was thirty years of age, and his family consisted of Mary, his wife, aged twenty-six, and daughter, Mary, aged four years; sons, John, two years, Joseph, six months. Samuel, Daniel, Sarah and Hannah were born in this country.

Joseph, the second son, in his youth, appears to have been fond of the water, and his father, in his will, offered him certain advantages, on condition that "he married and left the sea." His wife's name is not at hand. In 1682 he lived in Stratford, and died there in 1712, aged seventy-seven years. Joseph's sons, Joseph and John, were the administrators on his estate. The branch which shot off from the parent tree in this direction, has, for the most part, had a pleasing growth. John, the father of Abraham, who married Esther Janes, had five sons, viz: Caleb, Jehiel, Abraham, John, and Andrew. John, senior, died in 1732, and his wife, Abigail, and his son, John, were his executors.

Abraham, who married Esther Janes, was great-grandson of William Beardsley, the emigrant, and Esther was the granddaughter of William Janes, the emigrant. Abraham and Esther were married 17 April, 1723, by Rev. George Pigot, a missionary of the (London) society for the propagation of the gospel in foreign parts.

Their's was the first recorded marriage in the missionary's register. Their children were baptized by Dr. Johnson, afterward president of Columbia College; the first baptisms recorded in the missionary's register, and these dates will approximate near the date of birth, not far from eight or ten weeks after.

Abraham, junior, married Bethia Curtis, and had the following children, baptized as follows: Curtis, 1754; Ephraim, 21 September, 1755; Betsy, 2 January, 1757; Mary, 14 May, 1758; John, 20 April, 1760; Abijah, 22 January, 1766, by Rev. Mr. Winslow; Sarah, 6 September, 1767; Abel, 28 July, 1770; Jerusha, 1772; baptized by Dr. Johnson.

LINE OF SAMUEL.

37 (I) SAMUEL, SON OF SAMUEL.

Samuel Janes was eleven years old when his father, mother, friends and neighbors were slain by the merciless Indians on the memorable 13 of May, 1704.

Coming to manhood he found himself in possession of a large estate, having obtained title under his father and uncle, Joseph. He owned principally what is called Pascomac, and it became a byword among the inhabitants who knew his very narrow escape, that "if the Indians had struck him another blow he would have owned the whole of Pascomac."

Samuel and Jonathan, the two escaped brothers, had an undivided interest in the lands in Northampton and Northfield. They mutually agreed upon a division; Samuel was to retain those in Northampton, and Jonathan those in Northfield.

These lands were the estate of their grandfather William, the emigrant, their own father, and their deceased uncles. A quit claim was executed to Jonathan which is in our present possession, preserved as an interesting relic of nearly a century and a half old, exhibiting the beautiful penmanship, though in the style of that day, now antique.

It bears date "4 March, anno Domini 1729-30, and in the third year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord King George the second." (See page 63).

How wonderful the divine hand that snatched him from the cruel death that removed his parents and friends so tragically from earth.

He stands at the head of a numerous family, and will be remembered as the providential link in the chain which held in existence those whom an unfriendly fate would have denied birth.

The ways of the Lord are mysterious and too obscure for finite comprehension. His providence is infinitely beyond our control.

Samuel married Abigail

- 95 II. SAMUEL, born 13 Sept., 1724; married Hannah Brown; died 1788.
- 96 III. JONATHAN, born 1 April, 1726; married Hannah Parsons; died 1825.
- 97 IV. OBADIAH, born 29 April, 1730; married Beulah Lyman; died 1817.
- 98 V. MARTHA, born 1 April, 1732; died 3 Jan., 1746.
- 99 VI. ELISHA, born 7 March, 1734; married Sarah Phelps; died 1808.
- 100 VII. RACHEL, born 26 Dec., 1736; married Philip Clark.

Their son, Obadiah, who married Beulah Lyman, had no children, though always happy in such society, and called by a large circle of their young friends, Uncle Diah, and Aunt Beulah, who enjoyed not a few happy hours, under a roof of known and large hospitality.

Elisha Parsons now lives on the same spot, almost too near the roaring spring flood of the Connecticut river, which he was hardly ever known to cross.

Obadiah Janes was a teacher of common schools, which at that time was some considerable honor, as there were not many in those early days of the town. He was chosen deacon of the church, which office he filled for almost a quarter of a century. His wife was the daughter of a substantial citizen, Abner Lyman of Northampton, and was known as a woman of strong mind, affectionate manners and fervid piety. They both died in their eighty-eighth year, and within a few weeks of each other, he dying first, and both leaving behind them a sweet godly influence, so that many shall rise up to call them blessed.

39 (III) JONATHAN, SON OF SAMUEL.

Jonathan, like his brother Samuel, was lifted from the power of the destroying angel, and thus made the representative of a large posterity, whose life, under God, was so to depend upon his.

In charge of his uncles, Joseph and Abel, he grew to manhood, under such educational influences and training, as the times allowed. He eventually went to occupy the lands which were left by his grandfather William, in Northfield. Without a definite record, we suppose he accompanied the persevering colonists in their third attempt to settle this frontier town, or that he went up there soon after. He was then about seventeen years of age. This third venture was made about the year 1715, when a bold company of pioneers go up to repair the wastes and ruins where the savages had held full sway for about twenty years preceding; where the repossessing of valuable lands, might in part make amends for former losses, if not former perils and reinstate lawful heirs to the possession of a former generation.

Jonathan Janes, though young, was a worthy representative of his name and of his grandfather's family, always esteemed for his uprightness and integrity of character, and kindness to those in distress. He was a large land holder, and filled many town offices. He stood among the first as to property, as to virtue and intelligence. He left but one son to represent him, and to preserve his name to other generations. His wife and faithful companion survived him some fourteen years, and died in a good old age, ripe in all the Christian virtues, and prepared for the rich fruitions of a better land.

- 104 IV. JEMIMA, born 11 May, 1742; died 25 Oct., 1748.

James Oliver, son of William, was a protestant from the north of Ireland. William had four sons, John, James, Robert and William. They were men of fine carriage and form, and bore an excellent character. James had no issue. These brothers were early settlers in Athol, Mass., where their influence was long felt for truth, goodness, for virtue and pure religion. It was this kind of men, stern in principle, unwavering in their faith, brave and public spirited in their acts, that moulded the early society of New England, and eventually gathered up such fountains of morality and real goodness, that glad streams flowed out from them to bless the nation, if not to save the world.

Hannah, the wife of James Oliver, was a godly, fervent woman, a pattern of the old type of praying, holy Christians. Spending her last days, by the request of her younger brother, my grandfather, the present writer had full opportunity, in early youth, to witness the holiness of her life, and the yearning desire of her heart for the salvation of all around her. The loss of a kind mother in boyhood was in part made good by the especial attentions of this excellent kinswoman, to the author of this volume. She lived to the age of one hundred years, and would often relate anecdotes of her playing with the papooses when friendship marked their conduct; and when the Indian and French wars were waged, she knew the sorrows that filled many hearts in her own community, and in others, where her immediate friends and relations resided. There was too little cessation from Indian hostilities, and too little freedom from harrassing fears. Too many had fallen from the sudden and savage attacks of an especially revengeful foe. Fearfulness and trembling when retiring at nightfall, and hopeful deliverance were awaited during the sorrowful day, by the scattered New England settlers.

Her own father could relate, and did tell the story of the Pascomac massacre, as it still was painted before him on the canvas of his memory, as he was a suffering witness of their hurried and impartial slaughter of his parents and others, and the sudden stunning of himself by a blow upon the head with their ever present tomahawk, was ever recalled with a shudder. The remains of this sainted heroine, and her father's and mother's, with many others who bear the name, born in Northfield, rest in the burying ground near the hillside of the great meadow, and in a valley of picturesque beauty and richness. Often did those hands of gentle sweetness press this forehead in hope, and often did some kind wish find utterance, that this priceless soul might be born into a spiritual kingdom, and this heart beat in unison with the Saviour's.

If any soul was ever borne up to Heaven in the arms of true faith for the application of Christ's atoning blood : and if any prayer was ever offered for the spiritual uplifting of a sinner from sin, in her was that faith, and from her went up that prayer. Eternity alone can tell how much the writer and the other children are indebted to her for her godly life, her disinterested piety and her constant, spiritual labors. A happy reunion above may consummate the blessedness commenced on the earth.

LINE OF BENJAMIN.

49 (VI) HANNAH DAUGHTER OF BENJAMIN.

Hannah married John Brown at Northfield, Mass. He was probably of the Coventry Browns, though they lived in Northfield, as appears from the record of births of children. They were married 28 November, 1725.

CHILDREN.

- 111 VII. RUFUS, born 5 July, 1736.

50 (VII) HEPZIBAH, DAUGHTER OF BENJAMIN.

Hepzibah, twin with Hannah, married 11 March, 1729, George Hawkins of Coventry. From her has descended a large posterity of the name of Root. Hepzibah's daughter Phebe married Ebenezer Root. Ebenezer's daughter Elizabeth married Abner Fitch (a descendant of Rev. James and Priscilla Mason, daughter of Captain John Mason, conqueror of the Pequots). Her son Ebenezer R. married Sarah Dow, who had two sons and a daughter, Mariamne, wife of Hon. J. S. T. Stranahan of Brooklyn. Hepzibah and George Hawkins's children are as follows:

CHILDREN.

- 112 I. HANNAH, born 7 April, 1730.
- 113 II. HEPZIBAH, born 17 December, 1731.
- 114 III. PHEBE, born 4 January, 1734; married Ebenezer Root.
- 115 IV. OZIAS, born 1 August, 1736; married Anna Rose.
- 116 V. DARKIS, born 22 April, 1738.
- 117 VI. EUNICE, born 26 February, 1739-40.
- 118 VII. ANNA, born 23 September, 1741; married Elijah Janes.
- 119 VIII. DEBORAH, born 8 February, 1743-44.
- 120 IX. GEORGE, born 13 April, 1746; died an infant.

51 (VIII) SETH, SON OF BENJAMIN.

Seth Janes was well reported of as a good man, and we believe a deacon in the church at Coventry his native town, where he lived to exert his Christian influence, which followed a long line of worthy Puritans. We have not been able to obtain the history of Seth, or of all his children, as would have been agreeable. He married Sarah Larabe of Coventry, 2 June, 1739. She died 1801.

- 126 VI. ELIAS, born 17 March, 1752; married Susan Robinson.
- 127 VII. OLIVER, born 2 November, 1754, married Judith Rollo.
- 128 VIII. SETH, born 8 July, 1756; married Elizabeth Francis.
- 129 IX. SOLOMON, born 6 February, 1758; married Susanna Trapp.
- 130 X. TIMOTHY, born 9 March, 1760.

52 (IX) ELISHA, SON OF BENJAMIN.

Elisha Janes, the youngest son, married Mrs. Mary Dimock, on the 23 April, 1840. Elisha Janes, with his son Elisha, built a stone house, and was always industrious, if not penurious. He died there amidst his early associations, but some of his children moved away. After the death of Elisha the family moved to Canaan, N Y., where they lived till 1867. The family name is hardly known in Coventry at the present day, in this ancient town, where so many of the name were born and first breathed their vitality, and were thrilled with joyous hopes and flushed with high expectations. We have no particular outline of the character of Elisha or the major part of his children. We know of only three marriages among the nine children, and the records of Coventry do not shine much upon the subject so painfully obscure at this writing.

LINE OF ABEL.

71 (II) JONATHAN, SON OF ELISHA.

This Jonathan, who married Abigail.....about 1753, has on record at Lebanon his children's births and nothing further is known of this large family. Death may have early thinned their ranks, or the tide of western emigration may have swept them to some distant part of the country, where the changes are often so sudden that they are lost to sight or hearing and buried from remembrance. Thus many will remain unheralded and unrecorded in any genealogy.

47 (I) JONATHAN, SON OF WILLIAM.

Jonathan married Irene Bradford, granddaughter of William Bradford, well known in colonial history.

William Bradford was born in March, 1590, at Austerfield, Yorkshire, on the borders of England. He was a dissenter from the church of England, and in 1607, when only eighteen years of age, in company with others, made an unsuccessful attempt to go to Amsterdam, in Holland, and through the treachery of the master of the vessel, they were thrown into prison. Another attempt, afterward, was successful. He was active in preparing to come to America with Rev. John Robinson's church. He was foremost in finding a proper place for a settlement of the new colony. On the death of Governor Carver, he was elected as the second governor of the Plymouth colony. Bradford was governor, in all thirty-three years.

William Bradford's wife, Dorothy May, was drowned before she got ashore at Plymouth.

He married second, Mrs. Alice Southworth (Carpenter), widow of Edward Southworth. They lived near William Bradford when he was in England. She was about thirty-three years old. She waived her right of a personal visit, which would call the governor away from duties of vast importance, to their new colony, in the wilderness.

She brought with her considerable property. She was well educated, of extraordinary capacity and of great moral worth. She incessantly toiled for the literary improvement and refinement of Plymouth colony. If ever she felt honored by being married to Edward Southworth, descendant of Sir Gilbert Southworth, knight of Lancaster, she must have felt more happy in being the companion of him, who laid the foundation of civil and religious freedom in a new world, and whose name would be held illustrious by the generations to come after him to the end of time.

His son, Joseph Bradford, married October, 1698, Miss Anne Fitch. They settled at Norwich, Conn., and removed to Lebanon, a short distance from Norwich. He died 17 October, 1718. Her children were Anne, Joseph and Priscilla. Priscilla married Samuel Hyde. Alithea and Irene died infants. Sarah, Hannah, Elizabeth; Alithea, and Irene born 18 September, 1715. Irene married Jonathan Janes of Lebanon, 18 March, 1736. Alithea, twin, married David Hyde. Jonathan and Irene lived a happy life, and raised up an excellent family of children, who have honored some of the highest positions in the country, though we cannot accord the highest excellence to them all.

CHILDREN.

76 (III) TIMOTHY, SON OF WILLIAM.

We have a very slight history of Timothy, who married Mary Colton, probably of Springfield, as there is found the record. Cannot ascertain where he spent his last days.

CHILDREN.

158 I. TIMOTHY?

159 II. ELIJAH?

Probably others.

78 (V) ABEL, SON OF WILLIAM.

Abel Janes connected himself with the church of Christ, 27 September, 1741, in the seventeenth year of his age. This is another family which cannot be fully hunted up, as many efforts have proved. They may be numerous and prosperous for aught we can learn, or they may be few.

CHILDREN.

160 I. ABEL.

161 II. LOUISA.

79 (VI) WILLIAM, SON OF WILLIAM.

This third William Janes married Harriet Cheney, of Sturbridge. We have comparatively few facts concerning the children of William. So many years have elapsed since they were upon the stage in Brimfield, that we find little information except what is on record, and the records contain but little beyond the dates of births of children.

He married about 1757.

CHILDREN.

- 162 I. WILLIAM, born 3 October, 1758; married Nabby Belknap.
- 163 II. PELEG CHENEY, born 2 December, 1760; married Patty Coy.
- 164 III. CYNTHIA, born 23 June, 1763.
- 165 IV. SILAS, born 24 June, 1765; died 24 June, 1765.
- 166 V. HANNAH, born 6 September, 1766; died 1 June, 1767.
- 167 IV. NATHAN, born 20 June, 1768.
- 168 VII. HANNAH, born 8 March, 1770.
- 169 VIII. ELIZABETH, born 29 August, 1772.
- 170 IX. LAVINA, born 1 November, 1775.
- 171 X. SIMON, born 22 October, 1781; married Chloe Shumway of Sturbridge.

80 (VII) ELIJAH, SON OF WILLIAM.

This is the first Elijah Janes mentioned among the number, and we find quite a full list who are called by this name, after this one. He inherited a part of his father's property, and by frugality and industry made himself a good home and maintained a respectable standing among his fellow townsmen. He died at the age of fifty-four years, being large and corpulent; we might say gross, as he weighed 340 lbs, which is 15 lbs more than any other one of the family that has come under our knowledge. He married Lucy Crooker, December, 1756, in Lebanon, Conn., She was remarkably strong, athletic, and full of vitality. Their house was on a hill-side, and descending from it on one side to a spring, it is at an angle of 50 degrees. She would leave her infant in the cradle and go down a half mile to the spring, fill two pails with water and return with them, without stopping till she came in sight of her child. Such native force, such self-sacrifice, may seem in proper keeping with the early settlement of New England; but few at the present day would look upon it as consistent, would feel equal to the task, would be willing to endure the hardship. He died 21 June, 1783.

CHILDREN.

- 172 I. ELIJAH, born 8 July, 1758; married Phebe Gay, and died June, 1823.

- 196 V. DAVID, born 1755.
- 197 VI. DAUGHTER, born 1757.
- 198 VII. DAUGHTER, born 1759.

The second son, Captain John Janes, was connected with the 7th Maryland Regiment, 1 June, 1778, which was commanded by Colonel Greenby.

93 (II) THOMAS, SON OF MICHAEL.

Thomas Janes's birth place and particular history is not fully known. We find him in the service of his country, in the war of the revolution in a Connecticut regiment of infantry, under Colonel Moses Thayer, from 1 January, 1777, to January, 1782, five years.

He returned to his young family and engaged again in the humble pursuits of agriculture, and within two years, after escaping the dangers of the battle-field, was killed by the overturning of a loaded cart. Such is the wonderful providence of God, that permits our lives to enjoy all needed shelter from bullets or sword, to the brave soldier, and then by a singular accident calls the weather beaten warrior to his reward.

Thus providentially were left a widow and a young orphan family, the oldest but twelve years of age, to struggle and battle with life, and learn how to depend upon their own exertions for successful efforts in securing a competence, and in adorning life with the social virtues, and the virtue of industry and integrity. This brave patriot soldier was the worthy progenitor of Benjamin Janes of Wallingford, the father of Bishop Edmund Storer Janes. Thomas Janes was a spirited, thorough, thoughtful man, ready to retort when crowded with sharp repartees. He was killed 1784. His wife lived to 1820.

CHILDREN.

- 211 VIII. SARAH, born.....1775; married.....Caldwell.

96 (III) JONATHAN, SON OF SAMUEL.

Jonathan Janes born in 1726, lived till the year 1825, a ripe old age, full of rich and ripe experiences. He lived one-eighteenth part of the time since our Saviour and one sixtieth since the world was created. During his life some of the most important events in human history transpired; the rise and fall of many empires, the settling of some of the profoundest social questions of any century. He was a soldier in the French war while we were a colony of Great Britain. He was at the surrender of the French at Louisburgh. to the British and Colonial Forces, 26 July, 1758, Through life he was very social, full of good cheer, and full of anecdotes. He once had quite an adventure with an untamed, frantic beast, that plunged down from an eminence, on Mount Tom, to escape the determined pursuers, and he used to relate the circumstances without regard to his value, and ended by saying "he came near spoiling his hide."

Jonathan married (1) Esther.....; (2) Hannah Parsons. Esther, first wife, died 24 May, 1761.

223 II. ELAM.
224 III. URIEL.

Rachel died, and Philip Clark married (2) Abigail Grant of East Hartford.

CHILDREN.

- 225 I. CALVIN.
226 II. RACHEL, born 23 November, 1770; married Jonathan Janes.

102 (II) EBENEZER, SON OF JONATHAN.

Ebenezer married (1) Sarah Field, March, 1755; (2) Mehitable Alexander, daughter of Simeon and sister of Rev. Caleb Alexander. Sarah died March, 1766. Ebenezer died 22 January, 1808.

Deacon Ebenezer Janes was a great-grandson of the first William, and the grandfather of the writer and compiler of this genealogy. He was born in Northfield, at the old homestead, and maintained from early life a character for probity and virtue which furnished him an easy passport to the highest posts of distinction among his fellow townsmen. He inherited the estate and good name of his father, and was a large landholder in Northfield and the adjoining towns. He was a representative of the town at the general court at Boston, a town and church officer and town clerk for many years previous to his death.

He was a good, kind counsellor and a pattern of religious fidelity and godliness. He died some three months previous to the author's birth. He built the present house on the old homestead in the latter part of the life of Jonathan, his respected father, which, though occupied by some five generations of the family, is in a good condition, and is still regarded a friendly shelter for many friends, and a pleasant retreat. In times past, here, many innocent youthful sports have caused many a ring of merriment and jubilant exultation, and many dry jokes were cracked, as well as butter-nuts, and some of a still harder nature, and many fair maidens have here been led to the hymenial altar; and from this parental covering many robust sons have gone forth to unite their interests with other families to perpetuate their own names and to allure fortune, worldly joys and riches, to their own hearthstones. To this old homestead have they silently turned their eyes when battling with life, in ardent toil of duty, in new and untried enterprises, in whatever clime providence has cast their lot. Though Ebenezer had no brother, his offspring is about as numerous as those of his three Easthampton cousins, who started with him in the race of life. He had six sons who raised up families, and three daughters whose children are scattered far and wide through the country. They are located in many different states, and many of them are religious, industrious and frugal, and have acquired a name worthy to bequeath to their children.

Deacon Ebenezer Janes will long be remembered in the history of the people, and when the present generation has departed, the impress of his influence will prove permanently good. His counsel was not easily rejected, his word was not doubted, his example was influential. His wish was the law of the household and the guide of the neighborhood. He died at a good old age, respected and beloved as a kind neighbor, father and Christian friend, and an exemplary member and officer of the church of Christ.

Mehitable Alexander, his (2) wife, the writer's paternal grandmother, was a native of Northfield, in the 5th generation from George, a man of strong mind and stirring influence in his native Scotland, and obnoxious to the imperial party that sustained Charles II in his persecution and execution of the judges. He came to this country for a more quiet life and greater security, till the political parties should change their balance. He early settled in Windsor, Conn. From thence he came to Northampton, and with many others was interested in the negotiation of the lands with the Indians at Northfield, where his son John settled for life and raised up a large family. John had a son Ebenezer, and Ebenezer had a son Simeon, who was the father of my grandmother Mehitable Alexander. A large number of influential brothers were in this family, among whom was Caleb Alexander, the author of Alexander's Grammar and translator of Virgil, etc., and all of whom were considered indomitable in perseverance and noted for thrift.¹

 229 III. RUTH, born 16 May, 1757; married Calvin Bliss.

¹ As Mehitable's great-grandmother was Sarah Gaylord, it may be well to record this item which follows: Joseph Loomis, born in England, near Bristol, sailed with his family (having four sons) from Plymouth, 20 March, 1630, in the ship Mary and John, Capt. Squidd, and arrived in America, May 30. Josiah Hull married his daughter Elizabeth, Samuel Gaylord married their daughter Elizabeth, and John Alexander married their daughter Sarah Gaylord. His father, George, married Susan Sage. John's son, Ebenezer, married Mehitable Buck. Ebenezer's son, Simeon, married Sarah Howe.

FIFTH GENERATION.

LINE OF BENJAMIN.

128 (III) ELIJAH, SON OF SETH.

Elijah Janes of Pittsfield, born in Coventry, Conn., of respected parents, was among the early settlers of the town. He married in 1763, Anna Hawkins, daughter of George and Hepzibah Hawkins of Coventry. She was two years older than Elijah. He had three brothers, Samuel, Elias and Seth, who came to Pittsfield after him. Seth remained and became a permanent inhabitant, but the others were not permanent, except Elijah, who was for many years an inhabitant previous to his going with his family to South Hero, Vermont (Grand Isle) who sold out there, and returned again to Pittsfield among old acquaintances, perhaps through the influence of his grown children or perhaps to occupy lands which had not yet passed from the family. When the tide of emigration swept over New England and set in so strongly for the state of Ohio, the parents, then in years, buckled on their emigrating outfit and traveled with their children to the great central agricultural state of the Union. Elijah Janes is mentioned on the records of Pittsfield as a juror 7 April, 1773. Again mentioned as being sent with twenty others under Captain William Francis and Lieutenant William Ford, to Williamstown, as minute man, to respond to some sudden call, and then dismissed 21 September, 1776. Again he was similarly sent with sixteen others to New York, under Lieutenant William Barker, 30 September, 1776. They were dismissed 27 November, 1776.

Elijah Janes served with honor and bravery in the war of the revolution. He was among the minute men, and was frequently called out to very great inconvenience to himself and family.

He was afterward a lieutenant in a regiment of dragoons, under Colonel Elisha Sheldon, from 1 January, 1781, to August, 1781, and quartermaster from that time to 1 July, 1782. His record was that of a true, brave and loyal man. He died in Ohio in the year 1826. His wife, Anna, survived him about sixteen years, living to see one hundred years and eight months, a Christian heroine, having seen much of the good hand of God in her life, and having adorned a good profession for many long years. She joined the Congregational Church in 1793, in South Hero, Vermont, under the pastoral charge of Rev. Asa Lyon. She afterward joined the Methodists, so frequently done in the new states, and died in 1842, and was buried on the banks of the Alum creek, in Delaware county, Ohio, to wait, in hope of a glorious resurrection.

“ Her voyage of life’s at an end,
The mortal affliction is past,
The age which in heaven she spends,
Forever and ever shall last.”

 125 (V) SAMUEL, SON OF SETH.

Samuel Janes of Coventry, moved to Pittsfield some time before the war of the revolution. His intention of marriage to Abigail Brooks of Killingly, Conn., was published at Pittsfield, 18 December, 1772, and they were probably married the 1 January, 1773. Abigail died 11 October, 1791. Whether he married a second time in Pittsfield, or lived there after his second marriage, we are not informed, or of the marriages of the children.

271 IX. CLARISSA, born 9 June, 1801; married Francis Lathrop.

127 (VII) OLIVER, SON OF SETH.

Oliver married Judith Rollo, 22 February, 1775. It has been said they were the handsomest couple that ever went into the Coventry church to be married. A little more than a year and a half from their sweet bridal morning he died, a patriot soldier, in the service of his country, then connected with the army of the United States at East Chester near New York city. He probably died of camp fever, 7 October, 1776, aged only twenty-three.

CHILD.

272 I. SARAH, born 31 January, 1776.

128 (VIII) SETH, SON OF SETH.

Captain Seth Janes was a bold, athletic, fearless young man, born on the hills in Coventry, and probably was influenced to go to Pittsfield by his brother Elijah, who was twelve years his senior, and who had fixed himself there, in a comfortable home. He married Elizabeth Francis, daughter of William Francis. He went often to Vermont while engaged in raising an improved stock of horses, as he enjoyed there some better facilities. He is said to have imported the first blooded horses from England.

He imported the Florazella, the North Star and another horse. The first published paper of Pittsfield, contains advertisements of horses kept at his stables.

He lived about a mile from the village west, on the Albany road, on the place now occupied by Mrs. Chapman. They tell an anecdote of him which may be true. Once while taking some horses on his journey, he came to very sudden grief, for a spunky, proud young man that knew something of the world. He stopped to feed his horses in a stranger's field, where grass was plenty if not cheap, and the owner having come that way ordered him off. He thought he would intimidate the man and not hurry away, and he said to him, "Begone yourself, or I will serve you as I did the man under the blackberry bushes yesterday." The man left him, and reported the threat to the neighbors, who made thorough search and came upon the body of a man who had been killed some days.

Seth Janes was arrested, tried and proving a good character, and the man's body found, being too long dead, he was cleared from any guilt in that matter on the trial.

By whom that man was killed was not known. Though Seth was now released, he thought of his foolish dodge and his imprudent remark, and never forgot the lesson of that occasion. He was an energetic, nimble man, and when more than three-score years and ten, he could spring upon the saddle like a young man. He was then a well known and respected citizen of Pittsfield.

Some of the old inhabitants still remember Mrs. Janes, the fine graceful form, habited in her satin pelisse, amiable, kind-hearted, always ready to welcome her friends, who enjoyed under her roof a glad-some visit.

When a young wife, and all Pittsfield was like a forest, she was one day alarmed by a sudden rush, at her cabin door, of the sheep. On opening it, and seeing a ravenous wolf ready for his prey, she took her husband's gun ready loaded, and shot the intruder dead. It was quite a feat, and beautifully accomplished for a refined, unwarlike matron.

150 (IV) ELIPHALET, SON OF JONATHAN.

Eliphalet Janes was a man of some talent and wit. The customs of the times decoyed some from the paths of temperance, and affected their industrious habits. If he had any such fault, he was a kind hearted, friendly man, even balanced in temper and happy in seeing others happy.

Uncle Liff, as he was commonly called, was famous for extemporaneous and comic poetry. One time meeting a group of his neighbors, one Mr. Day, a Mr. Snow, a Mr. Knight, and a Mr. Winter, he was set upon to give them some verses, apropos, in consideration of a treat. He signified assent, and began by saying :

There was a Day in the month of June
When Knight came on before 'twas noon,
Rough Winter at the time passed by,
And Snow it was full six feet high.

At another time Mr. Deane, the miller, wished him to give him a suitable epitaph for his tombstone and so bantered him that he let off the following characteristic strain :

Under this stone there lies a Deane,
The biggest cheat that ever was seen,
He tends his mill both still and whist,
And for his toll takes half the grist.

He married a very worthy woman, Elfreda Lyon, of Eastford, Conn.

She was aunt to General Lyon, who was killed in Missouri in one of the fiercest struggles for freedom. She was born 27 May, 1749, and died 1 March, 1792. He died, aged ninety-three, in Sturbridge, at the house of his daughter, Mrs. Lucinda Gibbs.

155 (IX) JONATHAN, SON OF JONATHAN.

Jonathan Janes was born in Brimfield, and went from there to the city of Hartford; was engaged in some public business, probably the law, and resided there thirteen years, where he was active, trustworthy and influential. He was a member of the general court and legislature of Connecticut. He was appointed by a land company of Hartford to take charge of their lands in Northern Vermont.

He settled in Richford, and being appointed a judge of the county court, and afterward probate judge, he found it more convenient to reside in St. Albans. He was highly esteemed, and may well be called a candid, worthy, upright judge. His descendants are a numerous train of children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, now scattered over the country. A fuller and more complete record of this distinguished man should have found page room, but no one was willing to give attention to the subject as it "would not pay" them.

He married Patty Plympton of Sturbridge, in 1780, and died 30 June, 1823.

173 (II) ISRAEL CHAMPION, SON OF ELIJAH.

Israel Champion Janes went from Brimfield, Mass., when a young man, to Cornwall, Vt. He moved on horseback according to the custom of that day, and manifested indomitable energy and perseverance in subduing the then virgin forest around the place, and in preparing the young town of Cornwall to shine brightly in the galaxy of towns in that part of the state, and in rendering it an abode of comfort for true civilization, for educational and religious refinement.

He was among the first settlers of the town, and one of the leading citizens of that now flourishing and wealthy township.

It is a good farming town, and is of late famous for trade in the finer grades of Spanish Merino sheep. Some bucks raised there have sold for a number of thousand dollars, and some fortunes have been made by the traffic; and some sheepy ones have had the wool too thickly pulled over their eyes by the crafty.

Most of the descendants of Israel C. Janes are deceased or moved away.

His excellent, only living, son resides on the old homestead, and is a worthy representative of the name. Israel C. was a good man — reliable, worthy, active and Christian. He lived to a good old age, adorned with Christian virtues, and endowed with substance.

He married (1) Mary Ann Marsh, 1787; and (2) Lucina Reeves, who was born 11 April, 1767.

227 (I) JONATHAN, SON OF EBENEZER.

Jonathan Janes was a highly esteemed citizen of Northfield. The family lived a little east on a rise of the mountain, and was at a convenient distance for many merry visits from their friends on the street.

Their relatives the Fields, Mattoons, and Janeses, made many a friendly call, and possibly a few selfish ones in the spring, when all were cheerful and merry around the golden maple sugar, the syrup or the wax which was cooled upon the white driven snow, and crackled in the mouth.

How great the change from our boyhood. The house and farm remain. The maples are cut down for fuel. The family are scattered; and the majority passed from earth.

Time works out its own changes, and hushes many a gleeful and innocent voice, and curtains with the somber shades of mourning.

Jonathan married 1777, Caroline Mattoon, daughter of Dr. Elihu Mattoon, she was born 6 December, 1757; she died 15 August, 1821. He died 23 March, 1813.

230 (IV) OBADIAH, SON OF EBENEZER.

Obadiah Janes was brought up to the work of the farm. He lived a few years on a farm bought for him by his father, Deacon Ebenezer, about three miles from the village of Northfield, known as the Perry place by later generations. He afterwards bought lands in Bridport, Vt., and sojourned there a number of years.

When Ohio opened her arms, to receive so joyfully the sons of New England, he sold out, and took his family to what is now called East Cleveland. Here he secured good homes for his children, and enjoyed the fruits of his labors to a good old age.

When nearly sixty years of age, he visited his eastern friends, going all the journey on foot, out and back, without any apparent difficulty. He was a short and thick set man, as were the majority of this line of the Janeses.

He married (1) Polly Oliver, daughter of John, of Athol; (2) Harmony Bingham. She died 2 August, 1823.

CHILDREN.

- 578 I. POLLY, born 19 March, 1787; married Joel Doolittle; died 22 Feb., 1815.

 Adgate, moved to Ohio.
 597 VIII. LUTHER, born 25 Jan., 1800 ; married Mrs. Lucinda
 Mayo.

233 (VI) SAMUEL, SON OF EBENEZER.

Samuel Janes was a quiet, thoughtful, domestic citizen, attentive to his own duties, seldom out of town or away from the family circle. He was a broad, stout built, short man, strong and athletic. He could easily take two full bags of corn from the wagon, or cast and swing them on his shoulders, right and left, and carry them into his mill.

He joined the Methodist church in middle life, and was by far the most liberal contributor towards the church edifice, which is still standing, a monument of his beneficence. When the district needed a school-house, and the neighbors were unwilling to do their part, he gave the land, and paid principally, the expenses. He raised up a large family, and some of his sons were the most strong and athletic men in the state.

He married Susan Merriman, 1786.

CHILDREN.

236 (X) ZENOPHON, SON OF EBENEZER.

Deacon Zenophon Janes followed more nearly in the path of his honored father than either of his brothers, all of whom carried themselves honorably through life. He was chosen town clerk, and held the office through the balance of his natural life, as did his father. He was also an officer in the church, and a representative in the general court, as was his father. He maintained a good standing in whatever position he was called to occupy.

He was universally regarded as a man of worth, of sterling integrity, and unflinching justice. Social in habit, he cultivated a large acquaintance, and from the households of numerous relatives, there was a constant contribution of company to the old fireside, and sometimes to repletion. The numerous relatives and friends always found a warm welcome around this domestic hearthstone. The hand of kindness was always extended to the less fortunate, and Christian love generally shone in this domestic circle, during a period of many changes in the domestic realm, and the many dark shadowings of time. When death threw his sable mantle over a mourning household, the mind that had counseled and the heart that had loved, was indeed hushed in the silent shadows of death. The nine children were all then living, and some of them had large families. He married Sarah (Sally) Patric of Windsor, Vt., 27 January, 1796. She was born November, 1775, and died 3 May, 1814. He married (2), Tirza Childs of Deerfield, 6 January, 1824. She died 5 April, 1858. He died 21 October, 1829.

Sally Patric was the daughter of Samuel, born in Voluntown, Conn. Her grandfather was from the north of Ireland, a protestant, and had been for some time master and owner of a vessel. Having been prosperous, he concluded that he would make only one more voyage. But he left home never to return, for his ship, it is believed, was foundered at sea. Sally Patric's mother was a Miss Spicer. She died in middle life, and her father married (2), Isabella Alexander. So that in her my great aunt (she being sister to my grandmother, Mehitable Alexander Janes), I had a step-grandmother. Thus, Sally Patric had a number of brothers and sisters, and half-brothers and sisters.

Isabella's son, Matthew, who is noticed below, if he had lived, would have ranked senior officer of the army of the United States, after the retirement of General Scott.

NOTE.—When some of the northern army were at Williamsport, Va., a place named after General Otho Holland Williams, a distinguished hero and patriot in the armies of the United States, who founded Williamsport in 1787, they noticed his old tombstone; but the one which especially attracted their attention, and interested a native Vermonter, and told its history to a New Englander, and which has made many of the boys look up the history of Maryland, is as follows: "In memory of Capt. Matthew Alexander Patric, U. S. Army, born in Windsor, Vermont, April 13, 1794. Died in Williamsport, March 6, 1834. He was detached from Fort McHenry with his company for the security of this place, and died after a short illness, beloved and lamented."

CHILDREN.

- 608 I. MEHITABLE, born 27 Oct., 1796; married Medad Alexander.
- 609 II. AMY, born 21 May, 1798; unmarried.
- 610 III. ISABEL, born 26 Dec., 1799; married John Howland.
- 611 IV. PASCHAL, born 13 April, 1801; married Jane E. Hiller.

- 616 IX. MARY ANN, born 30 July, 1809; married Augustine Stebbins.

SHAYS'S REBELLION.—A slight rebellion broke out in Massachusetts soon after the close of the revolutionary war, excited by the popular discontent which so naturally grows up from a war, from depreciation of the value of the paper currency and from necessarily heavy taxes to pay public and private indebtedness. As is usual, government is held responsible for such distress. But demagogues, among whom Daniel Shays was prominent, were ready to embrace any opportunity to rise, at the sacrifice of others. They added fuel to the flame. Criminal courts were broken up by lawless mobs. They harangued conventions of the people, disclaimed all intentions of riotous proceedings, but spread the flames of burning hate to the established courts.

After breaking up some of the small courts, they undertook to break up the supreme court at Springfield. But they were wisely defeated by law and ordermen, under General Shepherd. On the 25 January, 1787, they attempted to take the arsenal on Springfield hill. The general warned the rebels as they approached, to desist, but they paid no heed. He then ordered a discharge of his artillery at their right, and then at their left, then over their heads. It was too tame an attempt for them. Then he ordered a well directed shot, which, killing two of their men, alarmed the insurgents so that they fled. A small company went from Northfield to join General Shepherd, and Zenophon Janes, then fourteen years of age, being a fifer in the company, was permitted by his father, to attend them, the captain promising to take good care of him. He used to tell us boys, about the frightened soldiers who stood guard during the night, over the dead bodies.

The two guards were timid, and expected to see some ghosts. It happened that during the night, a white horse thrust his head through a stable window near their station, and they concluded this was the apparition that had come for them; so they threw down their muskets and ran for dear life.

239 (XIII) EBENEZER, SON OF EBENEZER.

Ebenezer Janes early pursued an education, and graduated at Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H., and as his father thought all lawyers were corrupt, and that his son would be corrupted if he studied law to practice it, he could not consent for his son to be a lawyer; so he gave his attention to navigation.

He followed the sea for a number of years, as supercargo and master, and was taken prisoner during the Napoleonic war with the Danes, and lost his property by an unlawful confiscation of his cargo. He returned home in 1815, and the owners of the vessel or owner (we think it was Billy Gray), put him in charge of another vessel to engage in the South American trade. While at some port in that country, his ship was seized for the use of the government, which had then revolted from Spain. He returned home and spent several years in teaching at the north, but more years at the south, in Georgia and Alabama. In the spring of 1851, he came finally north, and his wife having died during his absence, soon went to Michigan to spend the short remainder of life, with his eldest son, Ebenezer, who was then residing there on his own farm.

He married Lucretia Smith, daughter of Joseph Smith, of Petersham, Mass., 7 March, 1811. Mrs. Lucretia Janes was a pious, godly, devoted mother. Her practical wisdom led many of her friends to seek her friendly counsel. The writer well remembers her clear and winning voice, her cultivated and refined manners, her sweet and profitable conversation, and her convincing way in presenting her views of truth and duty. He was present, also, and remembers the solemn scene when she parted from her dear children, and at the hour of death, when she made her earnest, dying appeal, exhorting them with pathetic tenderness to improve the privilege of living for Jesus, and the duty of striving to meet her in heaven. She was born 17 December, 1780, and died 30 October, 1831.

Her children grew up to habits of frugality and temperance, and are professedly Christian.

- 621 V. JULIANNA, born 20 Oct., 1822; married David Sanford.

240 (XIV) JAMES OLIVER, SON OF EBENEZER.

James Oliver Janes was named after his aunt Hannah, who married James Oliver. He was plain, unassuming, of good, sound sense, quite a reader, kind hearted, and obliging to all. When a young man he engaged with a company of men to go to Georgia to cut yellow pine, for lumber for some northern speculator.

He returned and spent his days in his native town. He married (1) Roxanna, daughter of Walter Field, to whom there were born two children. She died 5 November, 1810.

CHILDREN.

- 622 I. LUCRETIA F., born 17 Dec, 1808; married Daniel Callender.
- 623 II. ROXANNA, born 28 Sept., 1810; died 20 March, 1811.

James O. married (2) Joanna Holton.

- 624 III. ROXANNA (twin), born 17 Feb., 1824; died 23 Aug., 1830.
- 625 IV. JOANNA (twin), born 17 Feb., 1824; died an infant.

Daniel Callender was for some time engaged in mercantile business. He was town clerk for a few years; was always affable, polished, and a safe adviser; and was accounted, at the time of his death, the richest man that had ever died in the town.

ELIJAH JAMES,¹ son of ELIJAH and LUCY CROCKER, was the oldest and most distinguished of the brothers in a social, military and commercial position. He was a lieutenant in the war of the revolution, and was basely wounded after the surrender of the American forces, to the British, by an English officer. Some of his fingers were severed, and he received a life pension. He went into mercantile business in Lansingburgh, and often went to New York to purchase goods. This very English officer was a third partner in the firm where he bought goods. Though familiar and very social with the other two, he looked upon the third as beneath notice, and though the offending party made repeated efforts to speak to him and become reconciled to him, yet Elijah chose to treat him as a cowardly miscreant and pass him in silent contempt.

He made quite a fortune by trade and speculation. He bought government paper when considerably depreciated, and by the rise in value, made thousands. He was the first president of the bank of Lansingburgh, a justice of some of the courts, and otherwise distinguished.

He married Phebe Gay of Farmington, a woman of great intellectual vigor and executive talent. As her sister, Almira, who married Mr. Dole of Troy, left a daughter, the sister, Mrs. Janes, adopted her and brought her up to womanhood, when she married Horace Janes, Elijah's nephew, son of Cyrus of Brimfield, and by this marriage, Horace had the whole of his uncle's property. By various speculations Horace spent the whole in the devil's quarters in New York city, and died in 1844. His uncle, Elijah, died in February, 1823, and Mrs. E. Janes survived him some years.

250 (V) JOHN, SON OF ELIJAH.

John Janes went from Pittsfield, Mass., his native place, to South Hero, Vt., with his father, Elijah, and was there a number of years; probably returned to Pittsfield in 1812, for in 1816 a Mrs. John Janes united with the Congregational church in Pittsfield. Not far from this period they all went to Ohio.

John was an eccentric genius; but more, he was a regular, rough, untamed backwoodsman, self-willed, dogmatic, looking upon refinement, courtesy and good breeding as irrelevant to practical life. But he is credited with various labors to do good to assist in religious services and to preach some peculiar views as he had opportunity. Jehu-like he drove around the country, having no idle days; and used to say, "When I live, I live, when I die, I die." He worked till the last day of his natural life, and died quite suddenly. He married (1) Hannah Rockwell, 1791, who died 2d September, 1832. He married (2) Fanny Cothran, 1833. She died 1842. He again married (3) Miss Rose.

304 (IV) ALFRED, SON OF ELIPHALET.

Alfred Janes was less permanent in residence and business, than some others of the family. He resided in Ashford, Conn., Sturbridge, Mass., Hartford, Conn., Auburn, and Seneca Falls, N. Y.

He was in the boot and shoe business, kept the City Hotel at Hartford, and after that went into the manufacturing of looking glasses, with his brother. On removing to New York, he engaged in the house painting business with his sons.

He possessed considerable inventive genius and experimented more than was profitable for the pocket book. He was fond of reading, had quite a taste for drawing. His conversational powers were fine; entering into conversation with more or less historical knowledge, and a large fund of anecdotes.

He married (1) Mary, daughter of Elizur Warren, and Elizabeth Skinner of Hartford, January, 1794. She was born 29 October, 1777, and died 5 April, 1799. He married (2) Alice Cross (in 1800), who was born 9 June, 1774, and died 1837.

305 (V) WALTER, SON OF ELIPHALET.

Walter Janes was called a genius. He was a scholar, a composer of music, and a very good performer; and at the laying of the corner stone of Bunker Hill monument, the music of the occasion was led by him. He stood high among the Freemasons, and was appointed by them a lecturer in Connecticut and in Massachusetts. He was an inventor, and a number of patents were taken out by him which were thought to be useful, but he never realized much profit from them.

He composed a music book called the Harmonic Minstrelsy, which we found in the New York State Library, the title page running thus: "The Harmonic Minstrelsy, containing a new collection of sacred music in three parts, comprising variety of style, tune, time and measure, and well proportioned to all the different metres and keys commonly used in churches, together with a number of set pieces, choruses and anthems appropriate to Ordinations, Dedications, Thanksgivings, etc., chiefly original: to which is prefixed the necessary rules for learners. The whole being calculated and designed for the use of schools and public worship. By Walter Janes.

" Music hath magic powers and potent spells,
 To sooth the raging passions into peace,
 At dulcet tones, and modulated strains,
 Revenge assumes soft pity's placid mien.
 The lips of slander are in silence sealed,
 The eye of hate tears of compassion shed,
 The listening ear is charmed, the heart improved,
 A warm devotion fills the ravished soul.

" Printed by H. Mann, Dedham, Mass., 1807."

The book is thin and lean compared with our present large and extensive music books. Forty of the tunes have the name of Janes attached as the author.

A quotation from his poetic address delivered at Mansfield, 1819, will show his masonic views and the style of his poetry :

* * * * *

And though our thoughts and actions be concealed
 From mortal optics, yet they stand revealed,
 To that all-seeing eye, which heav'n surveys,
 Whom sun, and moon, and every star obeys;
 Whose care directs the comet's devious course,
 Guides every wave, and gives to winds their force,
 Views the recesses of each human heart,
 And, as they merit, his rewards impart.

These emblems of the ark and hope combine,
 To form an emblem of that ark divine,
 Which safely wafts us o'er life's troubled sea
 To the vast realms of blest eternity !
 And anchors us on that delightful shore
 Where evils cease and troubles come no more.

He married Cynthia Richards of Eastford, Conn., in 1802, and lived in Ashford. He died 24 July, 1827.

441 (IV) EDMUND STORER, SON OF BENJAMIN.

Edmund Storer Janes, D. D., senior bishop but one of the Methodist Episcopal church, is an extraordinary man and minister.

In assuming the delicate and responsible task of writing a condensed biographical sketch of this distinguished person for this genealogy, we hope to perform an act of justice, and truthfully to add to the record some facts not heretofore given to the public and but little known beyond a limited circle. It is well to gather up and place in consecutive order the scattered material concerning one who occupies so prominent a place in the eye of the world, and especially in his own communion.

He was born in Sheffield, Berkshire county, Mass., 27 April, 1807, twin with Rev. Edwin Lines Janes, now of Flushing, a discreet, true, and faithful member and minister of the M. E. church. Page

He was the son of a carpenter, and when four years of age, his father moved to Salisbury, Conn., an adjoining town, where he attended to farming as well as to his trade. Edmund Storer was principally engaged in labor upon the farm during the summer months till he was seventeen years of age.

From 1824 to 1830 he was for the most part engaged in teaching, and pursuing those practical branches, which would better qualify him for public life, whether for teaching or some other profession. He made rapid progress in his youth in the solid branches, in the literary classics and in some of the sciences. For some time he read books on law, with the intention of entering the legal profession. He was more especially brought under the influences of religion when about twenty years of age, at a time little previous to his expected entering upon the practice of the law, when God's solemn providence struck down suddenly his intended partner in business. This note of conscious warning turned his attention particularly from secular to spiritual things, and determined his other future plans for life which have brought him so eminently and so conspicuously before the world. Not long after this event he connected himself with the church of Christ, and his mind naturally revolved the inquiry concerning a clearer path in which to walk, and a more satisfactory way of doing some work for God and his church.

At the age of twenty-two he was licensed by the Quarterly conference of Belleville circuit, New Jersey, to preach the gospel. In April, 1830, he joined the Philadelphia conference of the Methodist Episcopal church. He was stationed for that, and the succeeding year, in Elizabeth, N. J. The following year he was appointed to Orange, N. J., and at the conference of 1833, was returned to that church; but in a few days, Bishop Emory appointed him an agent for Dickinson College to give a new impulse to her financial welfare. At the conference of 1834 and 1835, he was reappointed to the same laudable agency, employing in the whole, three years, to the arduous service of this institution.

Now commenced a new and important period in the life of this active, faithful man. He took a genial and heavenly-minded partner for his future life's voyage. He married Charlotte Thibou of New York city, whose parents and herself were honored members of the Episcopal church, and her mother was a sister of Bishop Croes of the diocese of New Jersey, who preceded Bishop Doane of the same diocese. But she devoted herself most actively to the interest of her adopted communion: a new and more appropriate field to call forth her rare womanly gifts, and evincing to her friends how well chosen was her new walk, and how certainly she would prove herself a happy and valuable companion of so ardent a servant of Christ. She was all to her husband that he had fondly anticipated, highly educated and disciplined to diligent service in the church, cultivated for the most refined society, capable of filling any required position in the circle of female friends, and of stimulating by example and precept those who came within the sweep of her influence. Her grandfather was a descendant of the Huguenots, and came from France to this land of free religion, to enjoy more unfalteringly the faith of his fathers. Mrs. Charlotte Janes was a true and affectionate help-mate to the man of God, the future bishop, who in April, 1836, was appointed pastor of the Fifth street church, Philadelphia, and it would not be presuming to say, that she has done her part as an excellent wife, to bring out the talents of the man, and assist him on, to a higher niche of fame and usefulness, than under other circumstances he could have attained. She is indeed the true woman, the polished, the modest, the discreet, the fearless, the talented, the extraordinary woman, mother, Christian, wife. During the latter part of the first year in Philadelphia, Dr. Janes suffered severely from an acute inflammation of the throat, and at the conference of 1837, at his own request, he was removed from the Fifth street church, being unable to speak in so large an audience room, and appointed to Nazareth church, Philadelphia, which had a smaller audience room and one much more appropriate for him, as one who had an apparently injured voice. He was reappointed to this church in 1838.

During these three years of pastoral work in Philadelphia, he read medicine with Dr. Hallowell, and attended medical lectures in the University of the State of Pennsylvania, and soon after received the degree of doctor of medicine from the Vermont University, and from that point a number of other degrees from Dickinson College.

At the conference of 1839 he was transferred to the New York conference, and appointed pastor of the Mulberry street church. Near the close of that conference year, he was elected financial secretary of the American Bible Society. The congregation were so unwilling he should leave them, that he consented to be reappointed to the charge at the conference of 1840, and also filled the secretaryship; doing double duty all the year. The conference years of 1841, 1842 and 1843, were wholly and earnestly devoted to the interests of that noble institution, the American Bible Society. During these three years, he traveled in nearly all the states of the Union, and gave an impulse to the financial prosperity of that society, which is felt to this day.

He left the secretaryship when elected and ordained one of the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church of America. He was ordained deacon in 1832 and elder in 1834. In 1842, he received the degree of M. D. from the Vermont University, and in the same year, that of A. M. from the Dickinson College, and in 1844 that of D. D. from the same institution.

In fulfilling the duties of his high office as bishop, he has had to perform extensive tours of travel throughout the length and breadth of the country.

He has twice visited California and Oregon, going and returning the way of the isthmus once, and once in returning from the Pacific coast (the year 1863) he crossed the mountains of Nevada and journeyed down the valleys and over the intervening sections of the country, which he desired to visit. On this journey he stopped a considerable time at Salt Lake city, and preached the first time that any Methodist minister ever preached in that modern Sodom. He has also a number of times crossed the Atlantic ocean on business for the general conference, and twice visited the Methodist missions in France, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, Norway and Sweden. During this visit to Europe he presided over one of the German conferences. In 1864, the general conference appointed him their representative to the British conference in England. He visited that conference in this representative capacity.

Bishop Janes had the responsibility of holding a conference in the town of Bonham, Texas, in February, 1859, which still adhered to the Methodist Episcopal church at a time when the blood of southern chivalry was up to a fever heat, when for one less bold and courageous and of less diplomatic tact, it would have been all his life was worth to be at work in any good cause among such hot-headed, fiery-tempered upstarts of that peculiar region and critical day. He faced the conscious offenders and bore himself with his usual dignity, grace and urbanity, as he rose to the importance of the occasion. He spoke calmly and with Christian forbearance to their impertinent leaders, who were lawyers and judges. His commanding presence, gentleness and extraordinary self-possession, triumphed over mob wrath, over the fury of these disturbers of good order, despisers of law, and of the rights of American citizens.

It may be said with truth he has been greatly prospered, in his various and important fields of labor. Wherever God has called him to efforts, in different pastoral charges, he has signally blessed his ministry, in the conversion of many souls to God, and the interest of the truth. He continues to preach the gospel as frequently as ever, in different towns and cities, and in various places throughout the United States. Wherever he is making a flying visit on business for the conferences, he is captured and expected to preach. He must preach at camp meeting, he must preach at conferences, he must preach at the dedication of churches, he must preach in every city or town where he spends the Lord's day, and never entertain the thought of discharge in this war.

He has probably traveled more extensively on ministerial service, ordained more ministers, and consecrated more churches, than any man in America.

At a recent conference he spoke at some length on the solemn and impressive questions ordered by the Methodist church on the admission of deacons. "The first thing," he said, "that concerned a man was the salvation of his own soul. He must never decline in fervor, but let the love of Christ impel him to the proper discharge of his religious duties. Meditation and prayer are essential to spiritual advancement. None can increase in knowledge except by reading and meditation, and none can obtain the divine light except by prayer. The truly Christian minister must have the light of the Holy Ghost shed upon him. The Bible is the constant companion of the minister, but human nature and human character are as essential to study. The sermons preached ten years ago would not touch the hearts of people now. Those who would make their ministry successful must note carefully the constant changes in human society."

When we saw the bishop for the first time, a few years ago, he appeared quite small in stature, but of late he has rounded up and run to waist, not a little. His mental labors do not counteract the influence of good living incidental to his position and society.

The peculiar shrill notes of his voice will always attract attention and be remembered. If he has given it the rigid discipline and long training which Demosthenes did, he will hardly expect to acquire great compass of voice. Bishop Janes appears to be the embodiment of will. He is called the greatest ecclesiastical administrator of the age. His executive ability is superior; it towers high above most of his coadjutors, and is perhaps equal to any living man. He enforces the strictest discipline as best comporting with the highest interest of their system, and he readily convinces all his disciples of the utility and advantage of whatever relates to their ecclesiastical order. He has genius, foresight, financial talent, clearness of intellectual perception, tact and fervor, which make him a decided leader, and crown with success his various efforts to advance the welfare of the Methodist Episcopal church in America, and elsewhere.

He has gray hair, a venerable, and a quiet though impressive dignity. His serious expression is not so severe, cold and searching as may be imagined, for all who know his heart, know he is a man of generous sympathies. He is a true thinker, and an earnest worker. His mind is always grappling, always solving, always illuminating the problems of the Christian's faith, and his energies are ever toiling, ever achieving and ever pressing onward in the line of his responsible duties. For him, rest and weariness of the mental and physical are almost strangers.

From the commencement of his teaching school up through his self-denying and various duties as pastor, as financial agent, or as bishop, his entire life has been made up of thought and effort. His countenance betokens the yearnings of his soul for intellectual, moral and spiritual advancement, and it shows that his decision and sternness of purpose are not likely to fail him, in carrying out his plans and in securing success. An acquaintance with the bishop will confirm such judgment. Though gentlemanly and courteous, he is slightly reserved; but most uniform and consistent in his opinions, open, frank, exhibiting sterling traits of character, large intelligence, and fervent piety. He stands before you the highly educated gentleman, the devout Christian who teaches by a lofty aim, under no circumstances whatever to weary of expanding and adorning the mind, and of redeeming and purifying the soul.

Bishop Janes is a calm, unassuming preacher, speaking in large churches with some labor, but at intervals decidedly animated. He has not the bravo of the boisterous, or the declamatory style of crude, unfinished speakers; his whole delivery is forceful, keen, pungent, but subdued. All his sermons, which are generally extempore, wear the same aspect of deep thought, much premeditation, critical reasoning, and devout, religious fervor.

This brief sketch will here close, with the addition of some extracts, from an anniversary address, before the Bible Society in 1838, and some extracts from his few published sermons.

Extracts of an Address delivered May, 1838, at the City of New York before the American Bible Society at its Anniversary.

* * * * *

Yes, sir, the Bible cause furnishes a channel sufficiently wide and deep to receive and bear to a perishing world the confluent sympathies of the entire church. To fully meet the drafts upon its treasury would require the munificence of the Bible-enriched nations: and to perform all its mental and physical labors would employ all the mental and physical powers that have ever been consecrated to God and philanthropy.

The Bible in the moral world, like the sun in the solar system, attracts our vision, as a common centre, and then by its effulgent irradiations discloses with perfect distinctness every other subject within the whole circle of divine truth.

 * * * * * * *

It is not the mere existence of so many colors, but their happy combination that constitutes the rainbow, that latest specimen of the divine penciling. In that pleasant symbol of mercy, that bright and enduring seal of promise, the lustre of each color contributes to the radiance and perfection of the whole beautiful form and the loveliness of the entire figure affords a rich revenue of glory to each separate color; and the brighter any of these constituents shall shine, the richer will be the glow, and the more enchanting the appearance of the whole; and the more splendid the combination is rendered, the more interesting becomes each integral part — so that all are indebted to each, and each are dependent upon all — the glory of each is the glory of all, and the glory of all is the glory of each. Thus, sir, with the church. It is the combined excellencies of all the denominations that gives to her her winning beauty and her powerful charms; and the more transcendent the excellencies of any one denomination becomes, the more resplendent the whole church is rendered, and the more fascinating and attractive her graces appear; while the more lustrous the whole church is constituted, the more vivid and striking will be the phasis of each denomination. Sir, it is not the simple existence of so many shining constellations, but their existing together, side by side, in the same heavens, shining with each other, and upon each other, that gives to midnight her gorgeous canopy, her firmamental glory, her overwhelming magnificence. And it is the existing together of so many Christian denominations, bestudding and illuminating the same spiritual firmament, that presents to the world the moral grandeur, the stupendous glory of the church, which is destined to command the homage and the admiration of all men; and even now renders her to her enemies, terrible as an army with banners. With these views I would say to all denominations, “Arise and shine.” “Put on thy beautiful garments"—burnish anew your celestial armor—multiply the trophies of your victories—and augment the glory of your moral achievements. * * * *

The work of translating the Bible into all the languages and dialects of the world, and affording a full supply of the scriptures thus translated, to all people, is a work so gigantic and requiring so great an amount of means and efforts, that it appears to me all denominations ought to become incorporate for the accomplishment of so magnificent and glorious a purpose. The different denominations, acting independently, cannot accomplish it without great delay, and needless expenditure for duplicate stereotype plates, separate establishments, and consequently increased incidental expenses. The condition of the world requires of all Christians prompt action in this cause, upon the most advantageous and economical plan. The opportunity to do which is evidently afforded by this association. The condition of the world! I must not occupy your time with a description of it; but perhaps I shall be permitted to attempt a figurative representation thereof: in doing which I would stretch my canvass from eternity to eternity. I would then unroll so much of it as the short space called time would permit. As we unrolled it, the first object discerned would be "the garden planted eastward in Eden," over which the blighting curse of sin had passed, withering its perennial flowers and blasting its delectable fruits; leaving nothing to relieve the saddened prospect but the lone star of promise, that threw its few but cheering rays upon the universal gloom. The next object of prominence which we behold, is Mount Sinai, covered with smoke, and cloud, and fire, trembling beneath the awfulness of the Godhead. Still further down upon the canvass, we see Mount Calvary, reddened with the blood of atonement. On its summit rests the bright cloud of mercy, and around it, to a considerable distance, shines strong and clear the light of heaven. The remaining object which we particularize, is the river of Death, which forms the boundary between earth and heaven, and rolls its dark and rapid current on to the ocean of eternity. Over this river there is but one bridge, and that is formed by the blood-stained cross of Christ, resting one end upon the shore of time, and the other upon that of immortality, on which the enlightened few are passing safely, to enjoy "the rest that remains to the people of God." All the remaining part of the canvass is crowded with a benighted, polluted, and sensual multitude of human beings, amounting to more than six hundred millions, groping in darkness, famishing with want, and increasing in wickedness; and this entire mass of human population, under the same resistless influence, are moving with hurried steps, and confused and frantic views, directly towards the river of Death; not knowing whither they are going until its cold flood overwhelms them, and the gloom of that hopeless eternity to which they are borne, reveals to them the desperateness of their condition. Oh, sir, shall we not relieve this scene of its horrors? Shall we not cast upon this whole prospect the radiance of inspiration? Shall we not, by the agency of the Bible, pour all along this dark engulfing stream the blazing light of salvation; revealing to these perishing millions, in blessed relief, the cross of Christ, offering to them the safe and available means of access to that heaven for which they were created, and in which they alone can find fullness of enjoyment for their imperishable souls. What we do, sir, we must do quickly.

Extract of a Sermon preached before the Superintendents and Teachers of the Philadelphia Conference Sunday School Union, in 1837.

They afford an opportunity of doing good to the community. All the wickedness and unlawful and riotous conduct existing in society, arise either from the ignorance or depravity of the persons guilty of them. If, then, by sabbath and other schools, we instruct and educate all the rising generation, we wholly remove one of the prolific sources of public insecurity and calamity. And if, by the agency of these institutions, we bring the youthful population under moral and religious influences, and not only make them enlightened, but pious, when they come forward in life, we shall then have dried up entirely sources of public immoralities, disturbances, and tumults ; and, having removed the cause, the effect must cease. And, to whatever extent we can accomplish these purposes, in exactly the same proportion do we establish public morals and the general weal. I will here take occasion to observe that knowledge and religion are the only conservative powers upon which society can safely depend for quiet and happiness. Peace can look no where else for a mandate directed to the stormy passions of depraved men, saying " be still," which command shall hush them in undisturbed tranquillity. And liberty, abused and endangered liberty, can turn her beseeching eye to no other power adequate to give stability to her empire and enlargement to her dominions. It was in view of these facts, that, after the French revolution had spent most of its terrific violence in blasphemy, anarchy, and bloodshed, the politic but irreligious Napoleon, having seized the helm of the government, declared, " We must restore the sanctions of religion." The same political sagacity, combined with genuine patriotism, induced the sage Franklin, when Paine's Age of Reason was submitted to him in manuscript, to say to the infidel author: " I would advise you not to attempt unchaining the tiger, but to burn this piece before it is seen by any other person. If men are so wicked with religion, what would they be without it ?" However novel and startling the declaration may be to some, and however unwilling others may be to admit the truth, I nevertheless affirm the fact, that the unpretending, and too often unnoticed, but devoted, holy. and praying body of sabbath school laborers of the present day, are doing more for the promotion of public virtue and the establishment and perpetuity of free institutions, than all the legislation and political arrangements of the world. They are the " standing army " of freedom. They are the Spartan band that have placed themselves in the Thermopylæ of the moral world, and hold in check, until the the gospel shall subdue them, the more than Xerxean host of the vicious.

Extract of a Sermon preached at Camp-meeting at Morristown, Sunday morning, 18 August, 1867.

* * * The gospel, nevertheless, is a law; it has its precepts; it has its requirements; it has its sanction; and in every respect is it a law. But, inasmuch as owing to our lapsed estate, we are incapable of rendering to God that perfect obedience which Adam could have rendered, God now permits us to fulfill this law by loving him with our might and mind and strength. And when we love him with all our heart, there will be found in that love an inspiration to all duty and to all devotion. It will incline us to every principle and precept which is laid down in the word of God. We shall be ready for all service, for all-sacrifice, for all duty, for all obedience. If, then, under the gospel dispensation — our dispensation under this covenant of grace in which we are placed — we fail, through our Lord Jesus Christ, and the assistance of God's truth and Spirit, to love him with all our power, and consequently to serve him with all our ability, then our whole character and conduct are criminal before him. We need not specify men's transgression; we need not to-day accuse you of profaning the name of God; of violating his holy sabbath; of breaking his commandments. The great fact that makes us criminal before him is the one I have referred to, that we have failed to avail ourselves of the provisions of his grace, to obtain a character that shall itself incline us to a life of conformity to his will and word.

Our impenitence, our neglect of God, our failing to accept, Christ, our not receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost, our not becoming good, our not living right — here is the great offense, here is the sum of all sin, as it is the root of all evil, in our hearts and lives. We might have been saved from them. It is our crime that we remain in them. As the apostle says in our text: "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." Our outward morality, our formal services, are not meeting our obligations to God. It is the love, inspired obedience and devotion, and consecration to him of hearts and service that meet our obligations and conform us to principles and precepts of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Let me ask your attention for a moment to the extent of this law, to its spirituality. As we have just intimated, it does not merely refer to the outward conduct. It takes cognizance of our moral state; our motives; our spirit; our thoughts; our words; our negligences; our want of conformity, as well as our transgressions; and now when we look at our hearts and see our vain thoughts and sinful motives — at least our mixed and imperfect motives — our negligences; how we have failed of our obligations to our God, and even to our own soul; how we have mispent probationary time; failed to attain the image of God and the mind of Christ, and preparedness for his fellowship here and his fruition hereafter — oh how our sinfulness comes up before our mind! how great our criminality before God! And when we consider the character of him against whom we have sinned; the rightfulness of his authority; the wonderfulness of his love; the greatness of his forbearance; the tenderness of his entreaties, and remember we have sinned despite all his goodness and grace — how aggravated are our sins! how terrible the turpitude of our guilt in his sight! * * * *

But when we seek forgiveness, there must be a moment when God says, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." And when the pardon is written both in his book and on the heart, oh how quick it comes, and how consciously are we apprised of the fact! And I believe we may be a long time seeking our sanctification, and growing better all the while too. The work may be gradual according to the context, that "if we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanses us from all sin." This walking with God of itself is a sanctifying power, and the meditating upon God, reading the word of God, observing the sacraments and ordinances of God, are all transforming; and no man can be in a justified state, and walk in the light, without growing better. And if he continues to walk with God, there will come in his experience a moment when he will rejoice in the consciousness that the promise of the text has been fulfilled, that he is cleansed from all unrighteousness — every affection holy, every aspiration of his spirit pure, every motive right; he can say with the Psalmist, "Thou restorest my soul." He has received the spirit of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. The soul is restored — restored to the image and nature of God; he is "cleansed from all sin." * * * *

Rachel Janes married Ezekiel White of Easthampton, their native place. He was an antiquarian and genealogist. He made some researches of value, and is quoted as authority. After his decease, his way-ward son took some of his papers and traveled around the country among the Janeses, and called himself and signed himself John W. Janes, by which he received entertainment and some information, and often said he was assisting me; reported I had lost papers and needed additional ones, and many other crude, unreliable statements. His conduct confused the minds of some, and has prevented my obtaining all the information necessary from certain sources. They say his demeanor is suspicious, and his mind a little unbalanced from a fall in youth. We hope this son, Jonathan J. White, has not materially disgraced the name of his much honored father. If he has ignorantly imposed upon a number of the family it is not the fault of the compiler.

Rachel married Ezekiel White, about 1827.

CHILDREN.

1245 I. JONATHAN J., born ... September, 1828.

1246 II. MARY KINGSLEY, born 1831; died young.

about the year 1830.

CHILD.

- 1255 I. JOSEPH THEODORE, born 11 September, 1831; married Helen Whiting.

508 (III) FRANCIS, SON OF OBADIAH.

Rev. Francis Janes (C) was a native of Easthampton, and an ardent love of souls led him to desire a preparation for the ministerial office, though it cost the arduous struggle which poverty and a limited acquaintance demanded. His unfortunate embarrassments may have sharpened his trust in the Saviour, and have moulded him for a higher position as a self-denying laborer in the Lord's vineyard.

During his course of education, he was kind and winning, and secured the esteem of all his Christian associates, and many others. He was eminently a pious man, and labored with great diligence and fervor in the gospel ministry, while spared to labor. He graduated at Williams College in 1828, then studying for the ministry, he soon found a field of labor. He preached at Chenango Forks and some other places in central New York, where he will be long remembered as a good, plain, Christian ambassador of heaven.

His last field of labor was at Colchester, Delaware county, N. Y., where he died in the midst of usefulness after twenty-two years of full ministerial service. During these years he led many souls to the Saviour, and sweetly closed his eyes upon earthly scenes to "go up higher," and behold the crowns of his rejoicing in a blissful sphere of light and glory.

The same indomitable energy that sustained him through his collegiate course, in poverty, and embarrassment; the same perseverance and Christian zeal that carried him triumphantly through the whole course of education, manifested itself in all the years of his ministry. Who can say what loss the church would have sustained if such a gospel torch had been extinguished in the lighting? The Independent in speaking of him at the time, said :

" * * In every church where he has labored God has blessed his instrumentality with precious revivals, and as the fruit of these revivals, about three hundred souls have been gathered into churches under his care." He was noted for his ardent piety, implicit faith, and a heart full of Christian sympathy and Christian knowledge. He was a man full of faith and the Holy Spirit. During his whole ministry he lost not a sabbath or a day from sickness.

He married at Centre Lisle, 2 October, 1832, Emily A. Marsh.

611 (IV) PASCHAL P., SON OF XENOPHON.

Paschal Peoly Janes served his father faithfully till he was twenty-one years of age, and then left home to live a few months in the vicinity of Boston. He then thought it would be fine to go to China on board a ship, which he could do only by becoming a common seaman, and go before the mast. He was gone from the country some sixteen months, and returned to visit Northfield, and related to his friends what he had seen, and what he had experienced. The sights he beheld on the Chinese waters, and in the city of Canton; women in small shoes, and carried in sedan chairs; and the strange and curious manner of life among the Chinese, hardly compensated for the cold and suffering on the ocean during the winter months, and the chase from pirates, which put them in apparent jeopardy.

He afterward settled down in New York city.

In 1853, he went to California, having lost his wife two years previously; but not realizing his expectations, he returned to the Atlantic states from the golden Eldorado, and died in 1867 in his native place.

Paschal P. Janes married Jane Eliza Hiller, 1827, in the city of New York.

614 (VII) EBENEZER, SON OF XENOPHON.

Ebenezer Janes after losing his wife and being unfortunate in his property, went to California to find a mine of gold. He returned, and went a second time, and still remains there, now in poor health.

It was expected he would remain at the old homestead, and keep the family name there; but after the death of grandmother and father, leaving the maiden sister in charge of his two sons, he went abroad to gratify his curiosity and pocket gold. But time brings reverses, and golden visions prove substanceless.

Ebenezer married January, 1836, Martha Billings. Martha died in 1845.

CHILDREN.

1487 I. CHARLES X., born 4 October, 1837.

1488 II. WILLIAM B., born 16 August, 1842.

These two sons were patriot soldiers, serving quite a part of the time during the war of the rebellion. Charles was wounded, and recovered; was sick, and discharged; but afterward enlisted in the navy, and was active and greatly exposed in the famous naval attack upon Fort Fisher, which was brilliantly captured by our army and navy.

William was wounded and recovered; was twice privileged with free board at the notorious Libby Prison at Richmond; saw many severe battles and conflicts of arms, saw numerous comrades struggling with horrid wounds and grim death. Like others, returned to enjoy the fruit of untold suffering, and leaving many behind who died gloriously for their country.

615 VIII. FREDERIC, SON OF XENOPHON

The writer, Rev. Frederic Janes, was early impressed with the sentiments of divine truth, and the importance of vital piety. That godly woman (see page 106) who felt the love of mother, in the absence of one who left us for another was fully excited her soul.

influence, breathing around us an atmosphere of winning and ardent piety, producing conviction and a childlike trust in the Saviour, and accomplished that gracious work, instrumentally, which is hereby gratefully acknowledged. He spent the boyhood of life in school, and portions of the summer months on the farm, so common with farmers' boys in the busy season. When about seventeen years of age he commenced the cabinet trade in Northampton. While there under the ministry of Mark Tucker, D. D., convictions were ripened into piety, and at the end of two years a yearning desire sprung up for an education to prepare for another sphere of action and usefulness. Preliminary studies at Hadley and Amherst, and a season with the celebrated classical teacher, Garfield, at Middletown, Conn., opened the way for an honorable entrance into Yale College, and a finishing at Amherst previous to a four years' course of teaching in Massachusetts, in Virginia, and in New York. During this period he pursued theology privately, with settled pastors; and spent a year in the service of the New York City Tract Society, previous to taking a pastoral charge for three years in the state of New York. Afterward he was settled in Bernardston, in 1841, near his native home, remaining nearly four years, amid arduous labors; seeing the work of God revived, many souls brought into the fold of the church, and the faith of all the members strengthened. He asked a dismissal, and engaged for a season in parochial labors at Pelham, and then commenced a course of financial labors for the Evangelical Society and kindred labors, for a number of years. At an interval he supplied a church in Lima, Mich., and afterward returned east, to New York, and there labored for some different benevolent societies, edited the Christian Parlor Magazine, and supplied occasionally some vacant pulpit. After spending some seventeen years in the city, he returned to his native state, Massachusetts, by invitation, to resume the pastoral office, and build up the cause of the Redeemer in his dear old Massachusetts.

Frederic Janes married (1) Paulina Burnell,¹ 15 September, 1833, Dr. Joseph Penney of Northampton, officiating. She died 20 November, 1851.

¹ First Generation. John Burnell married Mehitable Edwards of pilgrim origin, born about 1692; died about 1742. Mehitable Edwards was born 1695. Their children were: John, born 16 March, 1750. Methitable, born 6 October, 1753; died 15 February, 1769. Joseph, born 13 December, 1756; died 23 September, 1807. Mary, born 16 October, 1757. Ephraim and Manassah, born 27 July, 1860.

Joseph married Hannah Tucker, 15 February, 1794. Hannah died 1797.

Second Generation. John married Mary Banister, 25 March, 1772. Mary Banister was born 15 April, 1752. Their children were: Sereno, born 11 March, 1773; Joseph, born 15 December, 1775; Melzer, born . . . , 1777; John, born 15 Oct., 1778; Luther, born 20 March, 1780; Mary, born 7 April, 1782; Hannah, born 3 June, 1784; Calvin, born 5 July, 1786; Catharine, born 2 November, 1790; daughter, born . . . , 1792; Mehitable, born 30 October, 1794.

1498 X. CHARLES HERBERT, born 23 October, 1865.

¹Mr. Gregory came from England, and settled in or near Salem, Mass. His son Joseph was a good Methodist, and freed his slaves which he owned while living in Dutchess county, N. Y. He married Anna Brundridge, and had Joseph, Nathaniel, Elijah, David, John, Benjamin, Charles, Alvah, and Mary who married Stephen Trusdell, whose parents were from New Jersey, and the latter had the following children: Ann Maria, Sarah Jane, Lucinda, Amanda, Rachel Brown who married Rev F. Janes 1853, Henry, and the Hon. and Rev. Charles G., and John Harvey.

616 (IX) MARY ANN, DAUGHTER OF XENOPHON.

Mary Ann Janes, the youngest sister, taught school after the example of her two next older sisters, that is, by teaching found a husband. She was the early playmate and companion of childhood and youth, the trustful and confiding friend, the patient, intelligent, even tempered and discreet mother. She married 8 January, 1834, Augustine Stebbins, formerly of Granby, Mass., and moved to Masonville, Delaware county, N. Y. He was a farmer and carpenter, always ambitious and industrious. In December, 1866, they moved to East Cleveland, Ohio, where some of their children had settled, and in a community where they could enjoy more of the comforts of refined, social, and religious society, than in Masonville.

- 1504 VI. CLARK LUCAS, born 29 Dec., 1844.
- 1505 VII. HERBERT HOWLAND, 25 Oct., 1847.

Five of the sons served in the army, two or three of them as musicians, as helpers or nurses to the wounded. A. Jerome was a brave and distinguished artillerist in the western army. He won honors, and more, he won a beautiful lady of Marrietta, Ohio, with whom he became acquainted at the hospital, where the prompt attention of ladies was always regarded a patriotic duty.

618 (II) EBENEZER, SON OF CAPT. EBENEZER.

Ebenezer Smith Janes was the oldest son of Capt. Ebenezer. He was a clerk for many years in New York city; went to Michigan by the persuasions of his next younger brother; was there as a farmer a number of years, and returned to New York from want of health to endure a bilious climate, and the hardships of a new country.

He has enjoyed some prosperity in business, and purchased a small farm a few miles out of the city near Paterson, where may be enjoyed the comforts of life. Death has frequently entered the family circle, and four of their seven children they have yielded to God who gave them. He married on the 27 of November, 1842, Mary Ann Odell, who was born in New York city, 27 September, 1820.

- 1512 VII. ANNIE, born 16 Oct., 1858; died 11 Dec., 1867.

619 (III) JOSEPH, SON OF CAPT. EBENEZER.

Joseph Janes, son of Captain Ebenezer, married Hannah Holton of Northfield, who died in Penfield, Mich., in 1848. He returned to the east, and afterwards went to California; then after getting some of the shining dust came back to the Atlantic states, settled in New York, and married 2 July, 1853, Sarah Portlock, who was born in England, 28 July, 1829. She was an accomplished teacher, and after they had raised up a large family, she commenced teaching again, which seems to be a more congenial mode of life for her temperament than the duties of a farmer's housewife.

Oliver Janes married Emily Lee, daughter of Rev. Joseph Lee, A. M., of Northeast Pennsylvania.

Oliver was a large, powerful man, weighing 325 lbs, yet perfectly formed, and as nimble as any youth; and his athletic qualities and Herculean strength were never matched. He once carried nine bushels of corn upstairs at one load, and threw an ordinary man over a fence with perfect ease. Sitting upon the floor and pulling sticks he threw a boasting sea captain over his head. He was an amiable, good natured man, and a kind husband and father. He died 21 October, 1852. She died 17 October, 1855.

669 (VI) JOHN, SON OF JOHN.

Rev. John Janes was born at Grand Isle, South Hero, Vt., January 4, 1802, died at Norwalk, Ohio, 8 February, 1843.

At the age of seventeen he emigrated to Ohio, and at twenty entered the itinerant connection of the Methodist Episcopal church. His ministry was within the states of Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan; and, as a pioneer preacher, traversed many a swamp and wilderness.

He was a man of great energy and force; of genial temperament, and noted among his peers for brilliant conversational powers, endowed with wit and aptness in repartee. Bishop Thomson thus speaks of him in a published biographical sketch:

“His abilities in the pulpit were by no means of an inferior order. In his early days he was fond of polemical divinity; and, as he possessed sprightly wit, a warm fancy, an active intellect, and a dauntless heart, he was no mean antagonist. Unsparing to the strong, he was merciful to the prostrate, and courteous toward both. In his prime he was truly eloquent, though generally argumentative, he was at times exceedingly pathetic. He did not seek, like the giants of fable, by piling mountain upon mountain, to make a path from earth to heaven; rather like Apollos, he was wont, relying upon the aid of the divine spirit, to bring down heaven to earth by the melting strains of his subduing eloquence.”

The companion whom he married 21 May, 1828, was Hannah Brown, born at Plymouth, Vt., 16 January, 1808. Her family emigrated to Michigan in 1827, and herself and sister, young ladies of seventeen and nineteen, formed the first Methodist society, at Ann Arbor. Her present residence is Berea, Ohio.

772 (V) JULIA W., DAUGHTER OF JESSE.

Julia W. Janes, a most estimable woman, married Joseph W. Corning¹ of Nova Scotia. They reside at Palmyra, N. Y.

¹JOSEPH W. CORNING was a member of the New York Assembly in 1861, from Wayne county; and promptly and energetically aided in every measure tending to check or to aid the government in suppressing the rebellion then threatening the overthrow of the government.

On returning to Wayne county the 18th of April, the day after the adjournment of the legislature, he at once commenced enrolling men for a company of volunteers, under the then call for seventy-five thousand. The company was soon organized, and he commissioned captain, and was subsequently assigned as Company B, 33d Regiment N. Y. Infantry. This regiment was assigned to Third brigade, Second division, Sixth corps of the army of the Potomac, and participated in nearly all the battles, marches and retreats of the army up to May 18th, 1863, the time for which the regiment was organized (two years) expiring on the 22d of May, and were mustered out at Geneva, N. Y., June 2d, 1863. In October, 1861, Capt. Corning was promoted to the lieut. colonelcy of his regiment.

It was to Col. Corning (he then commanding the picket line near Lee's Mills near the left of the enemy's lines of fortifications of Yorktown), that the first information of the evacuation of their works by the rebels was communicated by two Alabama negroes, just after day-dawn on the morning of the 4th of May (Sunday). They said that the rebels began to go on Thursday night, and that on Friday night they took away all the wagons and most all the big guns, and most all the soldiers went, and last night they all went. They put stove pipes in the forts to make the Yankees think they were cannon. Col. Corning went with these men to Gen. Hancock's quarters (he then being in command of Third Brigade), and had him waked up, and informed him of what these men reported. Believing the report to be correct, Col. Corning took 60 men of his picket guard, and went to Lee's Mills and in full view of the enemy's works, and could readily see the stove pipes protruding from the embrasures of the forts (five of them) as represented by the negroes; and, in addition, there were stuffed representations of men fastened to stakes in the parapets, with muskets and bayonets fixed to represent sentinels. By eight o'clock the Sixth corps was in motion and crossing the Warwick creek.

At the battle of Williamsburg, the next day, May 5th, Col. Corning commanding a portion of the 33d Regiment (and in Gen. Hancock's command on the left of the enemy) as the enemy's line unchecked had advanced within fifteen rods of his position, ordered his command to charge. With one loud long shout, which was taken up and repeated by the rest of the troops, on he rushed with his command, and before reaching the enemy they broke in confusion and fled. This was the beginning, and all of what has been called the great charge of Williamsburg.

Col. Corning was constantly with his regiment, and commanded the advanced guard at Mechanicsville, May 24th, at which time Howell Cobb's brigade was driven out of that place.

On the 28th of June, Col. Corning was detached from the 33d and assigned to command the 77th Regiment N. Y. Volunteers, and commanded that regiment during the remainder of the seven days fighting, in falling back to Harrison's landing. At Harrison's landing he commanded the brigade; also at the time of returning to Alexandria, was at the battle of the second Bull Run; being now in command of the 33d Regiment, was through the Maryland campaign; at the battle of South Mountain, and Antietam. In the later battle his horse was hit four times, and he lost about one-fifth of his regiment; was at the first Fredericksburg battle, Dec. 11th, 12th, and 13th, 1862; and again at second Fredericksburg, May 3d, 1863, in the assault and carrying the heights, in which the 33d suffered heavily, and Col. Corning's horse was killed under him on the heights. The next day, May 4th, the enemy attacked the Sixth corps three times and were repulsed, but at a fearful loss to that corps, being about one-third of the whole available force, and the 33rd lost one-half of its members in the two days. About two weeks from this, the regiment had orders to proceed to Elmira, N. Y., to be mustered out, the two years ending on the 22d of May, 1863.

In the fall of 1864, Col. Corning again recruited a number of volunteers, and joined the 111th Regiment in the Second corps at the siege of Petersburg.

January 27th, 1865, he received orders from the adjutant general of the state of New York, to organize a new regiment (194th), which was the last regiment organized in the state; and just upon the eve of departure for the army, Lee surrendered, and the 194th was mustered out at Elmira.

John W. Corning, son of Col. Corning, joined the 33rd Regiment in Sept., 1861; was appointed 2d lieutenant in December following, 794 (I) ERASTUS, SON OF BENJAMIN.

Erastus Janes moved from Coventry, Conn., to the central part of the state when a young man, and braved all the difficulties of the pioneer life, and from small beginnings made a comfortable home for himself and family. The church of God with which he has been long connected, feels his goodly influence. He is a worthy officer in the Presbyterian church and his many virtues are well known and highly esteemed. He married Lydia Woodruff of Connecticut.

 1070 (II) HENRY F., SON OF EDWARD.

Henry F. Janes has a very remarkable history. He says of himself: "I am and all my life, from my boyhood, have been a backwoodsman in the strictest sense of that word. You will no doubt think it strange that a man could live to turn his sixty-third year in the United States, and never see a rail road or a telegraph ; but there is just such a man in California, and I am the man. I was born in Pendleton county, Virginia, on the head waters of the Potomac, in the Alleghany mountains, and in 1819 my father emigrated to Ohio, and I soon after left the parental roof, and from that time to the present, the western wilds have been my home ; and nature, clothed in all her virgin beauty, has been the book that I ever read. I have been in the front ranks of pioneers in Indiana, Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois and Missouri, and, in 1849, I crossed the plains to California, and my western career was cut short only by the Pacific ; but for that I know not how far or where I should have been by this time. I have one thing to comfort myself with at least, that is, the county of Humboldt, the one I live in, is the furthest west of any land in the United States, and I am within a few miles of the western end of it."

He was married to Keziah Ann Talbot, 15 March, 1827, near the famous Tippecanoe battle ground.

Colonel Absalom Janes was a successful planter and merchant. The Augusta Constitutionalist (a paper published in Augusta, Ga.), a short while after his death, says :

“Death of Col. Absalom Janes.—The life and character of this distinguished individual seems to demand a passing notice. Col. Janes was born in the county of Wilkes, in this state, 8 June, 1796. He removed to the eastern part of Greene county (now Taliafero) in 1816, and resided there until 1839, when he removed to Penfield, where he terminated his earthly existence, 25 September, 1847, having just entered upon the fifty-second year of his age.

“In this dispensation of Providence, the community in which he resided for the last eight years of his life, has been bereft of one of its most active and useful citizens. He was several times elected by the people of Taliafero county, as senator to the state legislature, in which capacity he faithfully and ably sustained the views and wishes of his constituents. He was also a prominent, consistent and efficient member of the Baptist church from 1828, to the time of his death. He was treasurer of the Georgia Baptist State Convention, for eleven years. Colonel Janes had talents of a high order, with a strong, active, discriminating mind; and possessed an energy of character, that enabled him to decide and act with promptness upon all practical questions that were presented to his consideration. He reasoned from analogy; and, although his conclusions were quickly drawn, yet they were seldom, if ever, found to be incorrect. In practical financial affairs, his judgment was inferior to none. He possessed a public spirit of benevolence, and was liberal in his donations upon every worthy object that presented itself. He also possessed a philanthropic heart, and could feel for the wants of others. The poor and destitute of his neighborhood ever claimed his attention, and he always showed a willingness cheerfully to relieve them of their wants and distresses. As a parent, he was affectionate, kind and indulgent. As a neighbor, he was courteous, peaceable, beneficent and obliging.

“In 1844, the democratic party nominated him as candidate for congress in the seventh congressional district, in opposition to the Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, and although Mr. Stephens was elected, his accustomed majority was greatly reduced. Mr. Stephens was then a whig. He was a states' rights democrat, and received a larger vote than any candidate who ever run in opposition to the Hon. A. H. Stephens."

1256 (I) LEGH RICHMOND, SON OF REV.
FRANCIS.

Rev. Legh Richmond Janes married Flora W. Smith of Syracuse, daughter of Rev. Vinal Smith and granddaughter of Rev. A. Bassett. The latter, born in Derby, Conn., about 1770, graduated at Yale College, with the highest honors, settled first in Winchester, Conn., afterwards in Walton, Delaware county, N. Y., where he preached for a time and retired in feeble health. He died in Walton, 1859. Her father, Vinal Smith, was born near Boston, 1801, and graduated at Union College in 1829; spent a year and a half in Union Theological Seminary, Prince Edward, Virginia, and a year and a half in Andover Theological Seminary.

Bronchial difficulty prevented his enjoying a continued pastorate. He was for a long time an agent for the Bible and tract cause.

Rev. Legh R. Janes was chaplain of the 99th Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, for the winter of 1864 and 1865. His colonel, Edwin R. Biles, was an old untamed soldier, served in Mexican war, and in Walker's filibustering expedition, serving as adjutant general. He was an infidel, with some redeeming traits of character. The regiment was engaged in all the prominent battles of the Potomac. It was also stationed in the front of Petersburg, and for a number of weeks in Fort Sedgwick, popularly known as "Fort Hell." They were in the Weldon raid, in the Thatcher Run fights at the final breaking up of the lines, and at the surrender of Gen. R. E. Lee.

Rev. L. R. Janes's first letter from home contained the news of the death of their first-born. He received it when marching to battle, in the rain, at a momentary halt.

The following lines express the mother's feelings, who penned them in her loneliness:

A CHANGE.

Happy father, loving mother,
Toddling prattler, baby brother,
Every day is sunny weather
While we all are here together.
What delight
Is ours to-night!
Happy little family!

A MONTH LATER.

Father on the field of battle,
Hushed at home the witching prattle;
First-born sleeping in the ground.
Four we were — now two are found.
Sitting silent
In the twilight,
Only baby dear and I.

Father, faint not in thy duties;
Mother, mourn not buried beauties.
Faithful labor, uncomplaining,
Yield thy child to higher training.
God bereft you,
But has left you,
Still a work for Him to do.

The following, written a month later, is of similar attractive interest for insertion :

SEPTEMBER.

I.

The tenth of September, we'll ever remember,
As being the day, my heart first gave its love
Into the dear keeping of him who is sleeping
Beside the camp-fire, with the blue sky above ;
And thought treasures up each endearing enjoyment —
Betrothal and bridal, mid roses of May —
Our busy young life, with its hallowed employment,
Our home, by the babe's merry laughter made gay.

II.

Another September, full well we remember,
From home to "the front," went my husband so dear ;
Its days yet unnumbered, our first-born had slumbered
To waken above, and the cottage was drear.
Of all sad Septembers ! My heart to the embers
I liken, while gazing upon them alone ;
The warmth of love's blessing, light the prattler's caressing,
Its life and its sweet sunshine has flown.

III.

How many, this autumn, sit sorrowing, sighing,
With sick hearts more heavy, more hopeless than mine ;
Our country's strong sons in their manhood are dying,
God grant that her daughters may never repine !
While sitting afar from the tumult of war,
I think of the wounded, the dying, the dead.—
My own loved one there ; hear, oh Father, this prayer,
May many, by him, to the Saviour be led !

IV.

And mother, dear mother, what if he should never Come back to my home, to my heart come no more?
 What if I should list for his footstep forever
 In vain — never hear his dear voice as before?
 Could nature endure it, the heart never breaking,
 To live on, without his dear love, precious prize —
 The babe on my bosom, half-orphaned, awaking?
 Oh! terrible thought! burning tears blind my eyes.

V.

Not soldiers alone, mid the cannon's loud rattle,
 Must cheerfully struggle, their country to save;
 But woman, when dear ones are falling in battle —
 Yes woman at home must be hopeful and brave,
 And patient endure it, nor faith ever falter,
 Though weeping the maiden, and widowed the wife —
 For dear country's sake, lay our all on her altar,
 Our heart's holy loves for the nation's dear life!

VI.

The fatherless babe, and the sad sonless sire,
 The mother, whose darling did "fall in the fight,"
 Shall reap their reward, at the call, "Come up higher,"
 For these hallowed off'rings to God and the right.

Shortsville, N. Y., Nov., 1864.

F.

He lived through more exposures than usually fall the lot of a chaplain, but returned to his church at Geneva, and resumed his pastoral labors.

Isabella Patric Janes married Henry Dingman of New York city. She was a lovely Christian, a sweet singer of sacred song, and an affectionate wife and friend.

In the early bloom of maternal thought and joy, the angels came that convoy sister spirits away to their better home in the bright abode of heaven, and took her thence to sing joyfully in paradise. She was greatly endeared to a wide circle of friends and relatives.

"So fades a summer cloud away,
So sinks the gale when storms are o'er,
So gently shuts the eye of day,
So dies a wave along the shore."

He is the only living son of Col. Absalom Janes, and received the degree of bachelor, and master of arts from Princeton College, New Jersey, and the degree of doctor of medicine from the University of the City of New York. He practiced medicine seven or eight years, and gave up the practice from physical disability. He has retired for a number of years from public life, and attended to his planting interest near Penfield, Ga. He has never been a candidate for any public office, although, in 1863, he was offered a commission of colonel of cavalry by the confederate government (so called), which he declined from physical disability. The war for the Union caused him to lose heavily, yet he has enough left to make himself comfortable and above board.

ADDED REMARKS.

Children of William, son of Thomas. Concerning Nos. 1082, 1083, 1084, 1085, 1088, Dr. T. P. Janes of Penfield, writes as follows :

1082. Edward Janes, third son of my grandfather, is still living, and was born 12 July, 1802. He had some seven children living, I think, three boys and four girls. He is a very intelligent and worthy gentleman.

1084. William Janes, fifth son of my grandfather, was born 27 February, 1807, and died 28 August, 1854. He represented Lee county, Georgia, several years in the state legislature. He had eleven children, seven of whom are now living, two sons and five daughters. Dr. John William Janes, his eldest son, is an educated gentleman, and a skillful physician.

1083. Archibald Janes, fourth son of my grandfather, was an educated gentleman, born 7 October, 1804, and died 1859. He had some four sons, and four or five daughters. His sons were highly educated men.

1085. Simeon R. Janes, sixth son of my grandfather, born 10 March, 1809, and died 1834. He was a most excellent man. He left three daughters, all of whom are since dead.

1088. Daniel H. Janes, seventh son of my grandfather, born 14 March, 1815. He graduated in Franklin College, August, 1835, studied law, but never practiced it. He devoted himself to planting. He has one son and five daughters, all living.

The following has so far got misplaced that we cannot, at this writing, connect it with the regular line. Probably of the seventh generation :

John Janes married Dorcas Pierce, and went to Michigan, to reside in 1839.

Children :

EDWARD, born ;
NEWTON, born ;
ELIZABETH, born ;

APPENDIX.

A few remarks concerning the Alexander family that are connected with this genealogy may be here added. The direct line of Mehitable's descent is through George, the emigrant, John, Ebenezer, and Simeon, but others are mentioned on these pages who may or may not be descendants of George.

Grandmother Janes, Mehitable Alexander, was a descendant of a high minded stock. The name of Alexander was of considerable note in Scotland. George Alexander is the first of the Alexanders that we learn came from Scotland. He was of the number who regarded Charles I an usurper, a criminal sovereign, and all of the party felt the storm about to burst upon them when Charles II was becoming seated in power. Having sanctioned the beheading of the king, he was not a friend of the young monarch, and though not obnoxious like the regicides to the sovereign power, yet he desired a retreat from the pending troubles, and came for quiet to this new world.

He was the friend of Whally and Goffe, the regicide judges, who came over the wide ocean to escape the fury of Charles II and found such a rude concealment in the celebrated Judge's cave at New Haven, and afterward a more friendly shelter in Hadley, Mass., in the house of the minister who had been long a friend of Rev. J. Davenport, and who was willing to shield men who had faithfully performed sworn duty.

George Alexander appears to have settled first at Windsor, Conn.; afterward he settled in Northampton, and was interested with his children and grandchildren in the settlement of Northfield, in 1673. He was a witness of contracts with the Indians as per record. He married probably in this country Susannah Sage.

His children were :

JOHN, born 25 July, 1645 ; died 1647.
 ABIGAIL, born ; married Micah Mudge.
 MARY, born 20 Oct., 1648 ; married Thomas Webster.
 DANIEL, born 12 Jan., 1650 ; unmarried ; died at Hadley.

JAMES JANES (260), probably connected with the family.

James may be No. 260 who married Elizabeth Woodruff. He served the country in the revolution, was at the surrender of Cornwallis, was at battle of Monmouth and Long island, and was at Trenton, Lundy's lane, Queenstown, Plattsburgh, and Stony point. He afterward lived in Utica, where his children were born.

He had a son, William Janes, who lives in or near Newark, N. J., born June, 1818, married Jane Dunster, whose daughter Emma was born 1849. Alexander Janes, born 7 April, 1819, married Elizabeth Dunster. The two brothers married the two sisters on the same day at Morristown, N. J. Alexander's children: Ellen Sophia, born 29 July, 1843. Hester Elizabeth, born 18 January, 1847.

The father, James Janes, married (2) a widow, Mrs. Nancy Ball. He died 1854. He was the tallest man in his regiment, being 6 feet and 3 inches. Was very strong — once lifted 1,100 lbs.

Letter No. 1.

LIEUTENANT FRANK JANES.

Headquarters 7th Reg't, O. V. I.,
BOLIVAR HEIGHTS, VA., Nov. 13, 1862.

David S. Janes, Esq.,

Dear Sir: Your letter inquiring as to the fate of your brother, Lieutenant Frank Janes of company F, 7th Regiment, bearing date August 17th, has just come to hand.

Lieutenant Janes was killed at Cedar mountain, in the sanguinary battle that occurred there on the 9th of August last, and very early in the fight. He received four wounds. The first was in his right thigh, the second shattered his left ankle, the third was in his hip as he was being conveyed from the field; and the last, which proved instantly fatal, was in the back of the head, while he was going off the field on the back of the orderly sergeant of his company. He was in command of his company until wounded, and no man on that bloody day showed more gallantry in the face of the murderous fire of the enemy than he. Recognized as among the bravest of the brave, he was beloved in life, and lamented in death by the entire regiment, and by none more than myself. If unflinching heroism in the face of death should consecrate the memory of its possessor, certainly that of Lieutenant Janes deserves a prominent place in the hearts of his countrymen.

An inventory of his effects has been made, agreeable to the articles of war, and they will be sent to you by express at once.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

WM. R. CREIGHTON,
Col. 7th Reg't. O. V. I.

Letter No. 2.

Extract of a letter from a grandson of Obadiah Janes (230) :

EAST CLEVELAND, Jan. 26, 1867.

Dear Cousin Frederic :

I received yours of last month in due time * * *
Some of my grandfather's (Obadiah Janes) travels might be of interest. He was out in the service just before the revolutionary war closed, but I think in no action ; but when about seventy years of age he started from Darby Plains, Ohio, to go to Washington, on foot and alone, to get a pension for a man by the name of Jackson, for which he was to have a share of what he got for doing so. He first came to Cleveland, thence to state of Vermont, thence to state of Maine (to obtain testimony), thence to the city of Washington, and on his way there, one forenoon, a man overtook him riding on what he thought a very smart horse. They traveled along together for half an hour or so, found that they were going about six hundred miles on the same road ; finally the man bid him good bye ; said he must get along faster than he could go on foot ; said he probably would not see him again ; so he rode on out of sight ; but when night came they both put up at the same house. In the morning grandfather got started first. The man overtook him again about the middle of the forenoon ; as before they traveled along together for about an hour, then the man rode on and left him again, after bidding him a good bye, and telling him he guessed he would not overtake him again, and they would not stay at the same house that night, but when night came they both stayed at the same place again. The next morning grandfather got the start of him again and traveled on, but the man came on and overtook him again as before. They went along together talking for some time as before, finally the man told him that he would not overtake him again, so as to put up at the same place that he did that night ; so they bid each other a good bye again the third time, and he rode on out of sight again ; and when night came grandfather put up at the same place he did again, making the third night they both stayed at the same places. The next morning grandfather started on ahead again; the man overtook him again before noon, but his horse began to show signs of being tired. They traveled along together and talked as before; but when the man stopped to feed his horse at noon, grandfather went on and left him behind again; but the man did not overtake him again, and that was the last he saw of him. He went on to Washington, obtained the pension, then from there to Vermont, and from there back to Central Ohio; traveled all the way round on foot and averaged his forty miles or more per day. Just before he died he came from Erie, Pa., to Cleveland, Ohio, on foot, and made his forty miles per day. Another instance, perhaps, is worthy of note. One night when they or grandfather (Obadiah Janes) lived near Lake Champlain, he went some ten or fifteen miles up or down the lake (I don't remember which), on skates, and coming back late in the night, all alone, he skated into the water before he was aware of it. The weather was very cold, and the ice had cracked across the lake while he was gone, and opened so that it let him in to the water. He had an overcoat on, strapped around him, but he went across the crack in the ice, then put one arm up on to the ice, let it freeze so as to stick, then put up the other arm in the same way, then raised himself on the ice; then he skated as fast as he could. His clothes were soon frozen stiff, but he had some ways to go before he could get to a house, then he had quite a little distance to walk on land to get to the house from the shore, and as he could not get his skates off it made it rather hard walking; but it must be done or else he must do worse; so he finally succeeded in getting to the house.

Now I suppose I had better tell you a little about father (Oliver Janes). He enlisted once in the war of 1812, so called, to go and fight the Indians; but before they were ordered off, peace was declared, so he did not go, and I have no war record to give for him; but he claims that he was never outrun by any person. He has also been a great traveler; thinks the hardest day's travel he ever did, was one time in January, and very cold weather up west, when the country was new. He went on foot from Fort Meggs to another fort, which were forty-six miles apart, and the snow about a foot deep with a crust on it that would nearly bear him up; but when he would go to step it would break through and let him down, so he could not walk, but he was obliged to run the whole distance. There were no settlers between the forts, so he must go through, or perish.

At another time he was going over the Green mountains, and he ran fifty miles in a day, besides stopping on the mountain and gathering a vial full of balsam fir, which took him two and a half hours. This last mentioned was performed, I think, in the spring or summer when the days were longer.

Uncle Alonzo Janes was not much of a traveler; but they say he, one time down in Vermont, mowed four acres of heavy grass in a day, on a bet of ten dollars. The man that made the bet gave him one-half of it for mowing it, and after he got that done, he went into another field and mowed one-half of an acre more; then outhopped the whole company. The next generation of Janeses about here are not so smart for work or travel; but I believe they are all true Union men. I know of no copperheads among them, although they did not go to war.

Letter No. 3.

HENRY JANES (552).

Letter to his father concerning his sudden death in April, 1805, from the physician.

These lines are to inform you that your son, Henry Janes, is no more. He was drowned at the mouth of the Genesee river, on the eve of the 17 April, 1805, in attempting to cross in a small canoe for his own diversion, with a boy about fourteen years of age. The canoe unfortunately overset. The boy swam ashore. The cry was made for help, but before it could be obtained he sunk; and before they could get him out, the spectators judged him to have been under water two hours. Every exertion to bring him to was in vain. I was called as a physician in about two hours after, but to no purpose to him, for there were no signs of life found. Deceased was buried in burying ground, four miles from mouth of Genesee river, the place of his death, in Northampton in the county of Genesee, N. Y.

By papers found in his pocket book, there was not the least dispute but that his name was Henry Janes; besides, he had said that his name was Janes, from Massachusetts; judged to be about twenty-six years of age; and by his writings, he had parents living in Northfield. He had middling good clothes, a good silver watch, which are in my care; something more than to pay his funeral charges and expenses thereof. He has some notes and receipts, etc., which will be of no use to any person except his relations. I published his death in the Western Repository.

[Physician's name is indistinct.]

Letter No. 4.

Minerva Brown (737), daughter of Esther Janes, and Oliver Sanford, writes concerning her family as follows:

CLINTON, Dec. 9, 1866.

* * * David died at the age of seven years. Charles married (1) Miss Taylor, niece of General and President Taylor; has married three times; has eight children; is a widower again, and has three children living. Mary Jane married Mr. Rutherford, lives in Illinois, on one of the largest farms. Brother Charles O. was a member of the assembly, at Jefferson city, Mo. Is president of a rail road, now resides at St. Francisville, Clark county, Mo. He lived on a plantation and owned slaves before he went to the assembly. His negroes would all have left if they had felt disposed, in his absence. But on his return he found everything well cared for, for they knew him to be a kind master. Some time before the rebellion he knew that trouble was coming; he gave away his cook, who had been with him twenty-five years, and disposed of others; and through the war was uninjured, although a Union man. Oliver Sanford died in New Hartford, N. Y., in 1827; Esther, his wife, died 17 January, 1844, in New York city. Adaline married Joshua Palmer, in the year 1833, in Oneida county. Janes and Joel were twins. Janes married (1) Mabel Green 1828 (she died 3 January, 1833, in Fayette, Miss.), died young. He married (2) Amanda Wells, 1840, in Chambersburg, Pa., They had six children: Walter Zenas, Laura A., Ella, Alice Virginia, Leonore J., Janes J. Sanford. Alden Brown married Minerva Sanford, 4 October, 1830, in New Hartford, N. Y. Children: Lucy Minerva, born 8 June, 1833. Sarah Amelia, born 5 July, 1835, died 1845. Alden S. Brown, born 16 August, 1836. Mary Josephine, born 6 October, 1840, died 6 October, 1846. George Diven married Lucy M. Brown, 3 June, 1863.

Her two children (my grandchildren) are Josephine Diven, and Eugene Diven. * * *

Yours truly,
MINERVA S. BROWN.

Letter No. 5.

Alanson Janes (743) was born at Canaan, Mass. His parents removed to the state of New York about the year 1800, and settled in what is now called Livingston county. He volunteered in the service in the war of 1812, and took part in most of the battles and skirmishes that took place in the western part of the state, particularly at Buffalo, Black Rock, and was at the storming of Fort Erie. He was severely wounded and brought to this side; his gallantry caused his promotion from a private to major, under General Brown. After peace was declared, he returned to private life and commenced farming, which calling he has followed since.

His oldest son now living, Erastus A. Janes, having completed his education, chose the profession of teacher, which he has followed to the present time as professor of higher mathematics and natural sciences. Horace L. chose the profession of law; he read with Hon. Judge Lord, of Geneseo, N. Y. After being admitted to the bar, he took up his residence at Mt. Morris, where he opened a law office, and likewise served as school commissioner for two years. His prospects for the future were very bright, until death suddenly stopped his career. Henry M., from the time he was of age, until the breaking out of the rebellion served as under sheriff of Livingston county; but during the last war, he served the government in several capacities with marked success. Wm. S. has likewise chosen the profession of law; has been admitted to the bar, and is now practicing in Mt. Morris, Livingston county, N. Y.

Additional Contents of Letters.

No. 192 William Janes, southern branch, had ten sons. Samuel settled near Maysville, Kentucky, and John and another brother settled in the Red River country about a century ago. Their children are scattered over the southwest, and there is no immediate access to their records.

A sister married Jacob Rentzell, another Henry Sybert, both of Georgetown. Rentzell kept a public house in the times of the revolution and entertained Washington, Jefferson, and nearly all the statesmen and military heroes of that day. One of his daughters married and moved to western Virginia in the neighborhood of Henry F. Janes's father, about 1820. Her husband was in business there, and one of the granddaughters went back to Georgetown to visit the Rentzell family. He died from intemperance; and the history of that branch is rather obscure.

THE NAME JAYNE.

JAYNE is a name not connected with the descendants of William Janes, but were doubtless connected centuries ago, on the other side of the Atlantic. We allow a small space to the following:

William Jayne, born in England 1652, had three sons.

Lost his wife in England. Fled from persecution to the United States. In the year 1682, preached for the Baptist church on Long Island; married a second time, had seven sons. William, the oldest, born 1684. This second William married, had a son William, born 1712; Samuel, born 1713; Isaac, born; probably third son went to Vermont.

William's grandchildren:

William of 1712, left a numerous posterity, settled in nearly all the states. Dr. Jayne of Philadelphia is a grandson of William.

Sons of William of 1712:

WILLIAM, born;
TIMOTHY, born;
ISAAC, born;
JOHN, born;
DAVID, born;
EBENEZER, born;

Timothy was a captain in the revolution; had forty-eight Jaynes in his company, and were all poisoned except Captain Tim., his servant, and Ebenezer, father of Dr. Jayne, who was a lieutenant in the company.

Page 129, John, son of Elijah who died about 1811, in South Hero, Vt., moved 1812 with his mother to Pittsfield, Mass., their former residence, and in 1816, or thereabouts, they moved to Ohio. The writer has evidence, recently, that Elijah himself did not live, to move with his children and grandchildren, back to Pittsfield, then to Ohio, to spend his last days with them, as printed.

No. 1558, DeForest, unmarried; served in the army to the close of the war.

NOTICE.

Any corrections that are desirable may be written out distinctly, the page or number referred to; also any additions which are needed for completeness: as it is proposed to get up an addenda of a number of pages of matter for such additions; beside, more or less information is expected from the other side of the Atlantic, concerning the ancestry of William the emigrant, and the writer expects in due time to issue a pamphlet containing the same which will correspond in size and type so as suitably to accompany this volume.
